If during the documentary check, a problem is found with the accompanying veterinary certification, appropriate action will be taken.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received concerning the import into the UK of whole turkeys from Brazil at below production cost. [101573]

Mr. Morley: My colleagues and I, and the Department, have received two letters on this subject, and the broader question of imports of poultry meat from third countries has been discussed with several stakeholders in recent weeks.

Noise Emissions

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the EU Directive relating to noise emissions from outdoor equipment. [102475]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

The EC noise emission in the environment by equipment for use outdoors Directive was adopted by the European Parliament and Council on 3 July 2000 as Directive 2000/14/EC. Its purpose is to harmonise national laws of member states regarding noise emission limits and labelling requirements at the manufacturing stage.

The Directive was implemented into UK law by The Noise Emission in the Environment by Equipment for use Outdoors Regulations 2001 (SI 2001/1701) made under the European Communities Act 1972.

The Directive and implementing UK Regulations apply to 57 types of equipment for use outdoors ranging from construction machinery to lawnmowers that require noise emission measurements to be taken and to fix labels showing the "guaranteed" noise levels of each machine. In addition the Directive and implementing UK Regulations set noise limits for 22 of the 57 types of equipment that are intended to be first placed on the market or taken into service as an entire unit.

Equipment is subject to conformity assessment, as with other European Directives of this type. Certain types of equipment, is subject to third party assessment by a Notified Body. In the UK these organisations are appointed by the Secretary of State, according to certain minimum criteria laid down in the Directive and Regulations, following an assessment by the United Kingdom Accreditation Service. A manufacturer or his authorised representative established in the Community may use the services of Notified Bodies in any of the other member states.

Once conformity assessment has been completed and provided that the equipment subsequently complies with the provisions of the Directive and any other applicable Regulations, the manufacturer will be required to affix the CE marking together with the indication of the guaranteed sound power level.

Enforcement of the UK Regulations is carried out by the Vehicle Certification Agency. The penalties for non-compliance range from the issuing of suspension notices to imprisonment or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale. It should be noted, however, that the VCA are seeking to work with manufacturers to help them comply properly, as well as taking enforcement action in justifiable cases.

Non-Bovine Carcases

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans he has to support farmers with the cost of collection of non-bovine animal carcases from 1 April. [101768]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 7 March 2003]: The Government are already voluntarily contributing nearly £30 million annually for the collection and disposal of fallen stock for TSE testing purposes. The Government have been discussing with the livestock industry how we can build on the arrangements that are already in place to develop a wider service for collecting fallen stock when the new animal by-products regulation banning burial comes into force from 1 May. Any further progress is dependent upon the willingness of the livestock industry to make a financial contribution to a national scheme.

Pesticides

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many pesticides are (a) approved for use in the UK, (b) approved for use in the UK but not for use in the European Union and (c) manufactured in the UK and approved for use in third countries but not in the UK or the EU; and when each was approved for use in (i) the UK, (ii) the EU and (iii) third countries. [101270]

Mr. Morley: At present there are approvals for 4,112 individual pesticide products in the UK. The number of active substances for which there are one or more approved products is currently 336.

There are two active substances that are approved for agricultural use in the UK but not for use in other member states. Differences in approvals between countries can arise because different approval conditions are applied or because commercial approvals are not sought in all countries. A spreadsheet (named the 'Indicative list') giving details of pesticides approved in each member state can be found on the Commission's website at: http://europa.eu.int/comm/food/fs/ph_ps/pro/eva/existinq/index_en.htm

The Government do not hold this information, as the UK's pesticide legislation does not extend to the manufacture of pesticides or to those pesticides intended solely for exportation from the UK. Neither do the Government have information on the details of pesticides approved for use in the third countries or information on when each pesticide was approved for use in the EU and third countries. Within the UK pesticides have been approved for use under the Control of Pesticides Regulations (COPR) since October 1986.

Raptor Protection

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to deregulate raptor protection. [99616]

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 2002-03

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 401 cols. W375 - 564 10 - 21 March 2003

Mr. Morley: There are no plans to deregulate raptor protection. All wild birds, including raptors are protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. However, I recognise the problems presented by birds of prey to game bird managers and pigeon fanciers, and believe the recommendations from the Raptor Working Group's final report, published in 2000, will provide an integrated solution to the problems presented by birds of prey in these particular sectors.

Work is already being taken forward by the country conservation agencies, and other organisations, and includes research in Scotland examining levels of pigeon predation, at lofts and release sites and during races, and testing the feasibility of using radio tags to follow pigeons when training or racing. I look forward to hearing the results. In addition, English Nature has signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Moorland Association on addressing the issue of raptor predation in the uplands.

Implementation of the Working Group's report's recommendations in Scotland and Wales is of course a matter for the devolved Administrations. Nevertheless, I have asked the Joint Nature Conservation Committee to report generally on progress.

Copies of the Raptor Working Group report are available from the Library of the House.

Regional Government

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the administrative cost of the Countryside Agency to each Government Office of the Region was in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03. [103016]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency is a Non-Departmental Public Body funded directly by Defra and it does not impose any costs on the Government Offices.

Ducks

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to her Written Ministerial Statement on 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 71WS, how much additional money she will be spending on future research work into the ruddy and white-headed duck populations. [101381]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 March 2003]: The Department has completed the ruddy duck control trial and will spend an additional £100,000 this financial year on research work into refining control methods for the ruddy duck. Further research will be undertaken in 2003–04. Final decisions have not yet been taken on the allocation of the research budget, but the expected expenditure is around £250,000. We also propose to participate in a white-headed duck workshop to be held later this year in Morocco. The workshop will consider various control methods used on ruddy ducks throughout Europe and North Africa.

Illegal Meat Imports

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many sniffer dogs are being used to detect illegal meat imports at UK airports and ports; and where they are used. [102157]

Mr. Morley: We are running a six-month pilot with two detector dogs, based at Heathrow airport. They are working in baggage, cargo and mail areas, and have been tested in a number of locations.

Noise Mapping Project

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the national noise mapping project, launched on 12 December 2002, will include the regular sounding of horns by trains at particular points on rail lines. [102530]

Alun Michael: The information being collected for the noise mapping project considers the level of noise on the basis of the 16 hour day, 4 hour evening and 8 hour night period, when averaged over a year.

The initial stage of the project does not consider short-term noise events such as the regular sounding of horns by trains.

Train drivers are required to sound their horns at level crossings and on the approaches to tunnels to give extra warning of the approach of trains to those who may wish to cross or are working on the track. This is done on the grounds of safety.

Trees

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to increase plantation of trees to boost the supply of wood available as fuel in the UK; and if she will make a statement. [101291]

Mr. Morley: Forestry is a devolved matter, and the policies for tree planting in Scotland and Wales are therefore the responsibility of the Scottish Executive and the Welsh Assembly Government respectively.

We are committed to increasing the use of renewable energy. This includes the use of woodfuel from both traditional woodland and short rotation coppice. There is already considerable scope for increased sustainable harvesting for woodfuel in existing woodland in England, and we also expect the area of woodland to continue to increase at its current rate of around 5,000 hectares per year. Support for woodland creation is provided by the Woodland Grant Scheme and Farm Woodland Premium Scheme, while the Energy Crops Scheme offers financial incentives for the establishment of short rotation coppice as woodfuel. A review of the support for woodland creation has been carried out, and the results will be published in the spring.

Turkey Meat

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research her Department has commissioned in the last two years into the UK turkey meat market. [101570]

Mr. Morley: None. However, digests summarising technical research in the poultry sector were published by ADAS in November 2001 and April 2002. The aim of the review was to publish poultry research findings of interest to the poultry industry. The reports cover turkey production, marketing, nutrition, welfare and meat quality, and are available on the Defra website at: http://www.defra.gov.uk/foodrin/poultry/techtransfer/index.htm

Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received regarding the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment (WEEE) Directive. [101975]

Mr. Meacher: We have received representations from numerous stakeholders including local authorities, dismantlers, retailers, manufacturers and small businesses.

TREASURY

Working Hours

Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) Wales work less than 16 hours a week. [102780]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Nigel Evans, dated 13 March 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about people who work less than 16 hours a week by country of residence. (102780)

The attached table gives the information requested for the three-month period ending November 2002. These estimates are from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). They are not seasonally adjusted.

People who work less than 16 hours a week by country of residence[1]—United Kingdom—September to November 2002

	Thousands, not seasonally adjusted
UK	2,422
England	2,084
Wales	98
Scotland	190
Northern Ireland	50

These Labour Force Survey (LFS) estimates are Not Seasonally Adjusted (NSA) and have not yet been adjusted to take account of the Census 2001 results.

Accountancy Services

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total cost to his Department was for accountancy services in 2002. [101568]

Ruth Kelly: This information is not held in the format required, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Advertising Costs (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102335]

Ruth Kelly: The information is as follows:

It is not possible to separate out costs for all media as this is generally bought on a UK wide basis. Where this is possible separating out spending for Scotland would incur disproportionate costs.

Royal Mint

The Royal Mint advertises in the UK media but does not currently break down spend geographically below this level.

No expenditure was incurred by the Treasury, the Office for National Statistics, the Office of Government Commerce, the Debt Management Office and the Government's Actuary's Department.

Economic Instruments

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on the selective use by the EU of economic instruments where the aim is to influence environmental behaviour. [102473]

John Healey: Economic and market-based instruments are one of the range of instruments that can be used to influence environmental behaviour. As stated in the European Economic Reform White Paper 'Realising Europe's Potential', published in February 2002, the Government are in favour of the use of such instruments at Community level where these are most appropriate.

The voluntary agreements with car manufacturers on carbon dioxide emissions from new cars and the forthcoming EU Emission Trading Scheme are good examples of the community, with the Government's support, developing economic and market-based instruments where these are most appropriate to address environmental issues with a strong trans-boundary or single market dimension.

Generally, the Government will only allow departures from member states' freedom to set tax rates and bases where there are strong, specific reasons for the UK to do so which would otherwise be undermined by a lack of community level action. For example, the Government recognise that there are strong and specific reasons to agree common approaches to tackle climate change. Otherwise, for example, businesses could relocate within the EU to member states that did not tax the causes of climate change—thereby not reducing climate change at all.

For this reason, the Government are prepared to agree to the proposed EU energy products directive that would increase the minimum rates of duty on road fuels within the EU and introduce minimum rates on some other energy products. This proposal is currently being discussed in Brussels and the Government expect that agreement will be reached on it shortly. However, the Government believe that member states should be free to tax more than the minimum rates if they wish to do so.

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he takes to ensure that his use of economic instruments is consistent with sound environmental practice; if proposals for tax changes are always subject to prior environmental impact assessment; and if he will make a statement. [102474]

John Healey: The Chancellor takes account of all relevant social, economic and environmental factors when deciding taxation policy. The environmental impacts of Budget measures are taken into account in the Budget decision-making process. The impacts of any measures which have a significant environmental effect are published in the Budget and pre-Budget report documents.

The document 'Tax and the environment: using economic instruments', published with the 2002 pre-Budget report, sets out how the Government use an evidence-based approach based on an assessment of costs and benefits when developing environmental policy measures.

Foundation Hospitals

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what request he has recently made to the Office of National Statistics in relation to confirming the correct accounting treatment for the classification of the borrowings of foundation hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [101620]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 10 March 2003]: Treasury officials consult ONS about the national accounts treatment of new institutions as a matter of routine. Treasury officials sent a letter to ONS on the 3 February 2003 with the full involvement of DH officials. This was a routine inquiry and not undertaken by Ministers.

Fuel Tax

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he has taken of the trends in relative transport costs of (a) car, (b) bus and (c) train over the last 30 years in determining his policy on fuel tax for private vehicles. [102480]

John Healey: The Chancellor takes into account all relevant social, environmental and economic factors when setting road fuel duty rates.

IT Projects

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each information technology project being undertaken by his Department and its agencies including (a) the start date, (b) the planned completion date, (c) the current expected completion date, (d) the planned cost and (e) the current estimated cost; and if he will make a statement. [98223]

Ruth Kelly: The information has been placed in the Library.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Swire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to enable the administration of the new landfill tax credit scheme. [102343]

John Healey: From 1 April 2003 the landfill tax credit scheme will be capped at a value of around £47 million per year for spending on local community environmental projects, ensuring that the current level of support for these projects is maintained. The Government have been considering the detailed administration and criteria for the successor scheme in consultation with stakeholders and are considering how the management of the scheme might be improved to ensure greater transparency and accountability, more attention to value for money, and better evaluation of projects. The Government will set out their plans for reform on a Budget timetable.

Pension Funds (Tax Treatment)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the proposal in his consultation document on the tax treatment of pension funds for a £1.4 million limit on tax exempt pension in savings includes (a) funded public sector schemes and (b) unfunded public sector schemes. [100795]

Ruth Kelly: The Government consultation paper, "Simplifying the Taxation of Pensions: Increasing Choice and Flexibility for All", proposes a framework of benefit rules that would apply, from the date of its introduction, to any pension scheme, whether in the public or private sector, that wished to utilise pension tax privileges. The consultation period allows people to put forward their views before final decisions are taken.

Waste Management

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it is his policy that revenue from landfill tax be recycled to business to improve waste management performance. [102730]

John Healey: As announced in the 2002 pre-Budget report, the Government are consulting with stakeholders on a revenue-neutral proposal to increase the landfill tax escalator to £3 per tonne in 2005–06 and to increase the rate of the tax by at least £3 per tonne in future years, on the way to a medium to long term rate of £35 per tonne. It is the Government's intention that these increases will be introduced in a way that is revenue neutral to business as whole. Decisions on how to achieve this will announced as part of the Budget process, taking account of views from stakeholders.

DEFENCE

International Military Services

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has examined with regard to the claim by the Government of Iraq that International Military Services supplied (a) materials, (b) expertise and (c) other types of support for the development of (i) missiles and (ii) rocketry. [98869]

Mr. Hoon: International Military Services ceased trading on 31 July 1991. Any transactions prior to that date will have been governed by our arms export policy at the time.

A400M

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the expected unit price is of each A400M aircraft; and what effect on that price the withdrawal of Portugal from the project involves. [102574]

Mr. Ingram: I am withholding the unit price information in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to third party's commercial confidences. The withdrawal of Portugal had no effect on the unit price.

Al Yamamah Deal

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 12 February 2003, Official Report, column 737W, on the Al Yamamah deal, when he estimates that the Al Yamamah programme will cease to have a significant impact on British jobs and exports. [101924]

Mr. Ingram: Al Yamamah is an on-going programme with no specific end point. Because of its importance for British jobs and exports, we look forward to providing continuing and long-term support for the equipment already delivered.

AWACS

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) establishment and (b) strength is of weapons controller personnel on the E3D AWACS fleet. [102575]

Mr. Ingram: The establishment for weapons controllers on the E3D AWACS fleet on 1 March 2003 was 33. The trained strength on the same date was 23. The shortfall of 10 being recently established posts that have still to be filled.

Biological/Chemical Warfare

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with his United States counterparts since 5 February in respect of the United Kingdom opposition to (a) incapacitants and (b) irritant chemical agents in warfare. [102074]

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has made to the United States administration about the British Government's policy on the use by British armed forces of incapacitant and calmative weapons, and irritant chemical agents during wartime. [102414]

Mr. Hoon: None.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the compatibility of disabling nerve agents with international obligations governing chemical weapons. [101941]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 10 March 2003]: The Chemical Weapons Convention prohibits the development, production and use of all toxic chemicals (both lethal and incapacitating) and their precursors, except where they are intended for purposes not prohibited under the Convention, as long as the type and quantities are consistent with such purposes.

Council Tax Rebates

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether members of the Armed Forces on deployment are entitled to council tax rebates; and if he will make a statement. [102516]

Dr. Moonie: All Service personnel who own a private property remain liable to pay council tax on their own property to the local authority concerned. Council tax rebates are a matter for local authorities and it is for them to interpret the regulations concerning "sole or main residence". In reaching their decision they consider case law arising from earlier council tax appeals, which takes various factors into account including the amount of time spent at a property, whether it is the family home, and security of tenure.

Foreign Warships

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what foreign warships have been involved in Royal Naval training exercises in UK domestic waters in the past two years. [102572]

Mr. Ingram: Royal Navy operational sea training, is recognised as a world leader. In the past two years, 129 warships from 15 nations undertook training with or were trained by the Royal Navy in UK domestic waters. Details are as follows.

[2] Joint Maritime Course

Frigates

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether warships will be re-allocated to Atlantic Patrol (North) duties following the deployment of HMS Iron Duke in support of operations in Sierra Leone. [102573]

Mr. Ingram: Outside the hurricane season, May to November, the unit assigned to APT (N) is routinely at 14 days notice to be in the Caribbean theatre. HMS Iron Duke demonstrated, during her transit from the Caribbean to Sierra Leone, that she is well within that 14-day notice period. It is not planned to supplement the APT (N) unit at the present moment.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the operational status is of HMS Montrose. [102552]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 1040W to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock).

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the complement is of HMS Newcastle; and whether she is fully crewed. [102551]

Mr. Ingram: The complement of HMS Newcastle is 249. 16 posts are gapped, but she is currently carrying 22 personnel under training. Her current strength is therefore 255.

Kuwait

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of water by troops stationed in Kuwait for personal hygiene; and what estimate he has made of the amount of water military personnel will consume per day. [102252]

Mr. Ingram: Water for the personal hygiene of troops deployed in Kuwait is being provided under a joint UK/US arrangement. This provides for showers and ablutions. No specific consumption rates are being applied. Bottled drinking water is provided at a rate of six litres per person per day. All personnel are advised to ensure that they adhere to the recommended consumption levels in order to avoid the effects of dehydration.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press officers from his Department he has sent to Kuwait in each of the last eight weeks. [102248]

Mr. Ingram: In the eight weeks since 13 January, the Department has deployed two press officers—defined as members of the Government Information and Communication Service—to Kuwait. The first officer departed during the week beginning 24 February and the second in the week beginning 3 March.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what menus are being used for troops stationed in Kuwait; and what plans he has to place troops on food rations. [102251]

Mr. Ingram: A wide variety of menus are available for troops stationed in Kuwait to ensure that they receive the required daily calorific intake and a balanced nutritional diet. Troops currently receive a hot meal for both breakfast and evening meal, while lunch comprises a US ration pack ready-to-eat meal provided under a joint US/UK arrangement. Operational ration packs have been deployed for use, if necessary and as required, in the event of any military action.

Manning Control Reviews

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel have been (a) recommended for manning control review, (b) subsequently discharged after a review and (c) transferred to s-type contracts in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [102443]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 9 December 2002, Official Report, column 13W, which explained that the number of Army personnel who have been recommended for Manning Control Point review is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Only two individuals have been discharged under Queens Regulations for the Army paragraph 9.413, 'Not required for a full Army career', in the last 12 months. Both discharges occurred in April 2002 and neither individual has been re-engaged nor transferred to an s-type engagement.

Naval Deployment

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the tasks are of (a) 800 and (b) 801 NAS. [102570]

Mr. Ingram: 800 and 801 Naval Air Squadrons are currently engaged in non-operational tasking. Both squadrons are undertaking routine training and participating in routine exercises, at home and abroad, to maintain their capabilities in readiness for future tasking as required.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of Naval Service personnel are (a) deployed and (b) warned to deploy. [102553]

Mr. Ingram: Approximately 26 per cent. of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines trained strength are currently on a range of operational deployments. On current plans, a further 13 per cent. are warned to deploy, including personnel warned for fire-fighting duties.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the French warships, Aconit and Primauguet, will join up with Naval Task Group 03. [102550]

Mr. Ingram: The French Ship (FS) Primauguet was integrated into the Naval Task Group (NTG) 03 between the dates 17 to 29 January 2003. There is currently no plan for FS Primauguet to re-integrate with the Task Group. While FS Aconit did participate in NTG 2000, there was never any intention for her to participate in NTG 03. A French Minehunter, FS Cassiopee, is currently assigned to Operational Armilla in the Gulf under United Kingdom Operational Command.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which operational warships are not (a) deployed on operations, (b) warned to deploy for operations, (c) preparing to deploy for operations, (d) allocated to duties for Atlantic Patrol (North), Atlantic Patrol (South) and the Armilla Patrol, (e) held in port as part of Operation Fresco and (f) at sea because crew are on leave. [102565]

Mr. Ingram: Of the ships available for operations for the remainder of this year, HMS GRAFTON is not currently operational, warned to deploy on operations, preparing to deploy for operations, allocated to duties for Atlantic Patrol (North), Atlantic Patrol (South), the ARMILLA Patrol, held in port as part of Operation FRESCO or operational but not at sea due to crew on leave. A number of ships warned for operations later in the year are currently in United Kingdom waters or alongside in the UK undergoing training or maintenance or in support of Op FRESCO. These ships could be made available for alternative tasks if priorities changed.

NBC Regiment

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) establishment and (b) strength is of the Joint NBC Regiment. [102555]

Mr. Ingram: On the 1 February 2003 the strength of the Joint NBC Regiment was 498 against an establishment of 343. These figures reflect the fact that the Joint NBC Regiment has been augmented for Operation Telic.

Operation Telic

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on under-18s serving on Operation Telic; and if he will make a statement. [102578]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 1053W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Stinchcombe).

Operational Welfare Package

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to allow to family and friends of service personnel deployed in operations to send a limited number of parcels to them at no charge, as part of the operational welfare package. [102698]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence recognises that an affordable, regular and reliable postal service is vital for morale and consequently a high priority is given to achieving this. For operational reasons there is very limited transport capacity available for mail both into the Gulf region and for onward carriage within theatre. A parcels service is, therefore, not offered within the mail element of the Operational Welfare Package for Operation Telic, and only letters and packets within the weight and dimension limits of the air letter service can be accepted, the maximum weight being two kilograms. The charge for a two kilogram packet is £6.89, which is the same as the United Kingdom inland first class letter rate. This is the limit of the concession currently approved and complies with the principle that Service personnel should not be disadvantaged by being deployed overseas.

Public Relations Agencies

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on public relations agencies in the last year for which figures are available; which public relations agencies are retained by each service; and for what reasons such agencies are retained. [102548]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, since 1999–2000, Ministry of Defence's public relations expenditure has been published in the annual Departmental Performance Report, broken down into categories of RN, Army, RAF and civilian recruitment, PR, marketing and business support services, Chief of PR, sales promotion, scholarships and National Employers' Liaison Committee. Copies of these documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Rail Mail

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investment the MOD has made in the (a) Rail Mail and (b) MOD equivalent in each of the last five years. [102421]

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what agreement is in place between Royal Mail and MOD for MOD use of the Rail Mail, and if he will place a copy in the Library. [102422]

Mr. Ingram: I assume that the hon. Member refers to the system known as "Mail Rail" which the Ministry of Defence does not use, and for which it has no requirement and no investment in this system. No MOD equivalent exists.

Reservists

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists called up for duty in connection with Operation Telic have failed to respond to call up papers; and what plans he has for legal proceedings against reservists who have gone absent without leave. [102554]

Dr. Moonie: The Reserve Forces Act 1996 (RFA 96) requires reservists who are served with a call-out notice to report for service at a specified time and place. Should a reservist fail to comply with a call-out notice, the Ministry of Defence will attempt to resolve administratively cases where an individual has inadvertently failed to comply with call-out instructions. This includes checking address information and sending a follow-up notice by recorded delivery. However, should it become apparent that the individual has deliberately failed to comply, a formal investigation will take place that may result in the reservist being charged with desertion or absence without leave. Such cases will be reported to the civil police and will be tried in a civil court. As at 10 March only one reservist is believed to have deliberately failed to report for service.

There are separate arrangements for conscientious objectors.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many NHS personnel (a) resident and (b) working in Eastbourne have received notice that they may be called up for active service; and what are their positions in the NHS. [91195]

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists have been called up who are employed at (a) Chorley hospital, (b) Preston hospital, (c) hospitals in the north-west and (d) hospitals in the UK. [100682]

Dr. Moonie: Generally, reservists are not required to provide details of their civilian employment to the Ministry of Defence until such time as they are called-out. Historically, therefore, no central records have been maintained by the MOD of the numbers of reservists working in the NHS as doctors, nurses, paramedics and other professionals allied to medicine.

As at 6 March, 1,065 medical reservists in the Volunteer Reserve Forces had been sent call-out papers. Of these, 509 are understood to be working in the NHS. Information detailing the specific NHS Trusts these individuals work for is not available centrally. In addition, 166 medical reservists from the Regular Reserve have been sent call-out papers. None of these are understood to be employed in the NHS.

The MOD is working with the Department of Health to minimise disruption to the NHS as far as possible.

RFA Sir Galahad

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the date of original build completion, (b) the date of acceptance into service, (c) the anticipated date of decommissioning, (d) the number of crew, (e) the stores-carrying capacity and (f) the ownership of RFA Sir Galahad. [102513]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested for RFA Sir Galahad is contained in the table:

Build completion date	1987
Date of acceptance into service	1987
Planned decommission date	2005
Crew complement	51 RFA, 20 Embarked force
Approximate stores capacity	Ammunition and cargo: 900 m3 vehicles: 15 Challenger tanks, 33 eight-tonne vehicles, 23 drop vehicles, 72 Land Rovers or 26 20-foot containers on the tank deck; 33 eight-tonne vehicles, 74 Land Rovers or 40 20-foot containers on the vehicle deck
Ownership	MOD

Riot Control Agents

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether it is the British Government's policy to forbid British armed forces from handling riot control agents such as CS gas and pepper spray during wartime; [102413]

(2) what the British Government's policy is on British armed forces taking part in joint military operations with other countries where riot control agents are used. [102412]

Mr. Ingram: The Chemical Weapons Convention prohibits the use of riot control agents as a method of warfare. United Kingdom armed forces will comply with their obligations under the Convention. The Government expect that other states parties to the Convention will likewise comply with their obligations under the Convention.

Sea Harrier

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Sea Harrier aircraft are being used in the quick reaction alert role. [102580]

Mr. Ingram: No.

Tornado

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) establishment and (b) strength is of Tornado F3 navigators. [102576]

Mr. Ingram: On the 1 March 2003 the establishment for navigators on the Tornado F3 was 112. The trained strength on the same date was 90. The figures include senior officer appointments on frontline squadrons and the operational conversion unit.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Advertising Costs (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102330]

Beverley Hughes: The information at the level of detail requested is not available. Where it is possible to disaggregate figures for advertising in Scotland, the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Advisory Panel on Country Information

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2003, Official Report, column 537W, on the Advisory Panel on Country Information, what progress has been made to date in setting up the Panel; and what his timetable is for appointing (i) the chairman and (ii) the members of the Panel. [102452]

Beverley Hughes: We have identified a number of eminent organisations that we expect will be interested in being represented on the Advisory Panel. The appointment of the chairman and members of the panel will take place during 2003.

Carter Inquiry

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the Carter Inquiry, with extracts that are deemed commercially confidential removed. [100901]

Hilary Benn: A summary of the key recommendations was published on 27 February.

As we have made clear, the report took the form of advice to Ministers, including advice on matters that are commercially confidential. As such, the report would not be in a form suitable for publication, even if the commercially confidential material were removed.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether disciplinary action has been taken against officials (a) in his Department and (b) in the Passport Service UK as a result of the Carter Inquiry. [101391]

Hilary Benn: No. The Independent Review Team was asked to look to the future and identify the long-term changes necessary to further improve the performance of the Criminal Records Bureau; it was not asked to conduct an inquest.

Juvenile Prisoners

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children under 18 in 2002 were made subject to category A status in prison when they were (a) remanded and (b) sentenced; [101255]

(2) how many children under the age of 18 were held in category A security conditions in prison in 2002, broken down by (a) age, (b) gender, (c) ethnicity and (d) location. [101256]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 10 March 2003]: In 2002, four 17-year-olds were received into Prison Service accommodation and made the subject of category A procedures. Two of them were sentenced during 2002. Of the two, one was first held at Altcourse and then transferred to Moorland as a Restricted Status prisoner upon sentencing. The other was held in Highdown and had his security categorisation downgraded upon sentencing later in 2002. Of the remaining two, one was received into Woodhill and the other into Belmarsh. Both remain on remand. With regard to their ethnicity, two were white, one black and one of Algerian origin.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter to him dated 17 January 2003 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Roz Hughes; [100687]

(2) why he has not replied to the letter to him dated 16 January from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Roz Hughes. [102186]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 12 March 2003.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will reply to the letter of 11 December 2002 from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells regarding Mr.Hoi Kam Tang. [101875]

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to the hon. Member on 13 March 2003.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Tunbridge Wells of 10 December 2002 and 13 January 2003 regarding Mr. and Mrs.Yurchenko. [101876]

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to the hon. Member on 13 March 2003.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of the Commission for Racial Equality was in the last year for which figures are available; what value for money assessment he has made of its work; and if he will make a statement. [99806]

Beverley Hughes: The total operating cost of the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) for 2001–02 was £20,465,894 of which some £19,340,000 was provided in grant in aid.

The most recent quinquennial review of the Commission for Racial Equality was completed in 1996–97. The quinquennial review which was programmed to take place in 2000–01 was delayed to enable the then new Chair of the Commission to become established in post and introduce a modernisation programme to enable the Commission to meet its new responsibilities under the Race Relations Amendment Act 2000. As the Government are currently examining the feasibility of establishing a single equality body we do not anticipate conducting a separate value for money assessment of the CRE at this time.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his statement of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, when he expects the independent executive agency to be created within the Home Office; how many additional staff will be needed; and at what additional cost. [101019]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Records Bureau will be established as a separate executive agency as soon as practicable. As part of the process of establishing the Agency consideration will be given to the number of additional staff required and to the additional cost.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his statement of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, what steps he is taking to determine whether current systems in the CRB would be able to deal with the doubling in demand of criminal record checks. [101028]

Hilary Benn: As the report of the Independent Review Team made clear, a further programme of enhancement to the current IT system will be required in order to satisfy the demand for Disclosures. This will be pursued as part of the renegotiation of the contract with Capita.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his statement of 27 February, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, if he will define the needs of the intelligent customer function of the Criminal Records Bureau. [101029]

Hilary Benn: The precise details need to be settled, but the function would include setting standards for the end-to-end process, auditing them and, monitoring performance against them; contract management; identifying and specifying product changes; managing relationships with registered bodies, the police and other stakeholders; and handling complaints.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his statement of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, (1) what implications the increased requirement for bodies registered with the Criminal Records Bureau to verify applicant's identity will have for their public liability insurance; [101033]

(2) what implications the increased requirement for bodies registered with the Criminal Record Bureau to verify applicant's identity will have for their public liability insurance. [101033]

Hilary Benn: We will address any evidence that may be presented to us on these matters, under the current consultation exercise on the recommendations of the independent review team.

Under guidance issued by the Criminal Records Bureau, registered bodies are already required to verify the identity of persons, applying for a disclosure, in implementing the independent review team's second recommendation we are simply seeking to formalise this requirement. We are currently consulting registered bodies on the implications for them of recommendations and will consider any representations made about the impact on their insurance premiums.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, (1) how the reduction in the numbers of bodies registered with the Criminal Records Bureau will enable voluntary and community organisations more easily to access disclosures; [101035]

(2) how many voluntary organisations the Independent Review Team into the Criminal Records Bureau consulted as part of their inquiry. [101034]

Hilary Benn: In the course of fieldwork for the review, representatives of two major voluntary organisations were interviewed. We have launched a consultation exercise on those recommendations of the review team that directly impact on the role of registered bodies. We expect that the sector, either through the Consultative Panel and Voluntary and Community Sector Working Group that we have put in place, or directly, will wish to make known its views on the implications of these recommendations, so that they can be fully taken into account.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his Statement of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, what the contractual consequences are for his Department with Capita of recommendation 7 of the Carter Inquiry. [101037]

Hilary Benn: This is a matter for the discussions that will take place to renegotiate the contract with Capita.

Experience Corps

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding the Home Office has provided to the Experience Corps. [101867]

Beverley Hughes: The funding for the Experience Corps amounts to a total of £19.9 million over three years to March 2004. To date they have received £11.67 million.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what targets the Government set for the Experience Corps; and what progress has been made towards those targets. [101868]

Beverley Hughes: The Experience Corps have been set the target to recruit 250,000 volunteers, reflecting the diversity of people over 50, by 2004. A further target requires that 90 per cent. of the volunteers have been active members over a three month period and that 40 per cent. of these are active over the period of a year in 2003–04. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) on 11 February 2003, Official Report, column 716W, which gives details of progress. The performance of the Experience Corps is currently being reviewed by the Home Office.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many volunteers the Experience Corps has recruited since its formation; how many of these are from ethnic minority communities; and on what basis each total is calculated. [101869]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) on 11 February 2003, Official Report, column 716W, which gives details of volunteers recruited by the Experience Corps. The Experience Corps state that, as at 28 February 2003, over 60 per cent. of their volunteers are from ethnic communities. These figures are drawn from a database maintained by the Experience Corps. The performance of the Experience Corps is currently being reviewed by the Home Office.

Haslar Removal Centre

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been commissioned by his Department into the operation of Haslar Removal Centre since February 2002; and if he will place copies in the Library. [102450]

Beverley Hughes: No specific research has been commissioned into the operation of Haslar Removal Centre. However, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Prisons carried out a formal inspection of the Centre in February 2002. We expect the report of this inspection to be published in the near future.

Immigration Detainees

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration detainees are being held in prisons. [102467]

Beverley Hughes: The latest available data on the number of persons detained solely under Immigration Act 1971 powers relate to 28 December 2002. As at that date, 215 persons (to the nearest five) were being detained in Prison Service accommodation of which 110 are recorded as having claimed asylum at some stage.

The routine use of Prison Service accommodation for immigration detainees ended at the beginning of 2002, but it remains necessary to hold small numbers of detainees in prison for reasons of control and security. The figure of 215 may also include individuals who are held pending deportation on completion of custodial sentences.

Information on Immigration Act detainees as at 29 March 2003 will be published on 30 May 2003 on the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Muslims

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further action he is taking to prevent racially and religiously motivated attacks on Muslims; and if he will make a statement. [100584]

Beverley Hughes: The Government are committed to tackling hate crime regardless of what form it takes.

The criminal law already contains a wide range of powers to deal with violent behaviour and harassment. This includes, under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, the ability for courts to issue higher sentences to perpetrators of crimes motivated by racial hatred. These measures send a clear message that the Government will not tolerate these types of crimes.

The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), working with the Government, have developed guidance for police forces on dealing with these types of crime (including racially and religiously motivated crime). This guidance is entitled "Identifying and Combating Hate Crime" and was last updated in April 2002.

Additionally, ACPO has produced an Operational Guide for the Management of Inter Ethnic Conflict, which will ultimately aim to improve officers ability to understand, communicate and interact with the many diverse communities.

The police service seeks to maintain strong links with representatives of Muslim communities. The Muslim Safety Forum, which brings together representatives of Muslim communities and the police meets every month to consider any issues of concern.

Women's Prisons

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the report by the Youth Justice Board on the detention of teenage girls in women's prisons. [101344]

Hilary Benn: The Youth Justice Board (YJB) is responsible for the commissioning and purchasing of secure accommodation for under 18s and for the placement of individual offenders.

On 18 February the YJB announced its intention to remove all under 17-year-old girls from Prison Service accommodation during 2003. There are currently no 15-year-old girls in Prison Service accommodation, and around 20 16-year-olds.

This is in line with the commitment given by the then Home Secretary in March 1999 when he said that he intended to use the greater flexibility provided by the detention and training order to place sentenced 15 and 16-year-old girls in available non-Prison Service accommodation. The detention and training order came into force in April 2000.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Courts (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will announce plans for the co-location of the Crown court and magistrates court in Salisbury. [102183]

Yvette Cooper: Wiltshire magistrates courts committee and Wiltshire county council are undertaking a feasibility study into the provision of a new combined crown, county and magistrates court facility in Salisbury. Once this feasibility study has been completed (expected to be at the end of March); and the outline business case has been approved, which on current plans will be during April, an announcement on future plans will be made.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Orders in Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how many Orders in Council in 2002 were made under (a) the prerogative and (b) an Act of Parliament. [103042]

Mr. Robin Cook: A total of 526 Orders in Council were made in 2002, of which 372 were made under an Act or Measure and 154 were made under the Prerogative. The Orders approved at each Council meeting are listed on the Privy Council Office website (www.pco.gov.uk) and copies are placed in the Library of the House. The majority of Prerogative Orders related to the appointment of Ministers and Privy Councillors, the private affairs of Chartered bodies, and Channel Islands business. The majority of statutory Orders were confirmations of Church Commissioners' schemes under the Pastoral Measure 1983.

Privy Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how many times the Privy Council met in 2002; and how many privy councillors were present on each occasion. [103041]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Privy Council met on 14 occasions in 2002. Details are given in the table:

Date of Council	Number of Privy Councillors present
14 January	3
23 January	3
12 February	6 (of whom 2 were new Councillors attending to be sworn in)
26 March	6 (of whom 2 were new Councillors attending to be sworn in)
17 April	4
22 May	7 (of whom 3 were new Councillors attending to be sworn in)
31 May	5
26 June	3
16 July	7 (of whom 2 were new Councillors attending to be sworn in)

Date of Council	Number of Privy Councillors present
22 October	5 (of whom one was a new Councillors attending to be sworn in)
29 October	5
5 November	4
20 November	8 (of whom 4 were new Councillors attending to be sworn in)
17 December	6 (of whom one was new Councillors attending to be sworn in)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council on what basis privy councillors are selected to sit on ad hoc committees of the Council. [103043]

Mr. Robin Cook: Nowadays such committees are established only to consider petitions from bodies seeking a Royal Charter. Their business is conducted in correspondence. Those involved in the correspondence are those Privy Councillors with ministerial responsibility for the area of the body's activities and the Law Officers.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Further Education

10. Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to establish a further education national training organisation. [102712]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Formal Government recognition of national training organisations, including FENTO, the further education NTO, ended in March 2002. This is part of a UK-wide transition to Sector Skills Councils representing wider employment sectors. FENTO continues to deliver a number of essential functions and has operated with assistance from the Sector Skills Development Agency and the department during this transition period.

Good progress is being made towards developing an employer-led Sector Skills Council proposal covering the workforce in the higher education, further education, work-based and community-based learning sectors. This development will support the delivery of Success for All and the Higher Education strategy and enable employers to look strategically at the UK learning sector for the first time.

Children's Centres

11. Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with local education authorities about guidelines for the new children's centres. [102713]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Officials have been taking forward detailed discussions with local authorities on this issue. The Sure Start Unit issued children's centre guidance to local authorities at the end of February. Prior to this, a series of stakeholder events were held to enable local authorities and other key partners to feed in their views. In the coming weeks officials will be meeting with every local authority due to receive children's centre funding, as they start their strategic planning.

Higher Education

12. Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive regarding the White Paper on higher education. [102714]

Margaret Hodge: The White Paper "The future of higher education" (Cm 5735) states that there will be discussions with the devolved Administrations about the impact on the other UK countries of the proposals for student and institutional funding for higher education institutions in England. Initial discussions between officials have already begun, and I expect them to continue over the coming months.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) assessed on the relationship between A level points scores and class of final degree; and if he will make a statement. [101041]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 10 March 2003]: The Department has not commissioned research into the relationship between A level points scores and class of final degree. However, it has reviewed a number of research projects in this area including:

i) "Determinants of degree performance in UK universities: a statistical analysis of the 1993 student cohort" by Jeremy Smith and Robin Naylor at Warwick University. This was published in 2001 in the Oxford Bulletin of Economics and Statistics, 63, 29–60. It found that

> "...for women, an extra two points per A-level subject (i.e. one grade higher per subject) raises the probability of a good degree (at least an upper second class honours degree) by over 9 percentage points. There is a similar effect for men."

ii) "School Performance and the Likelihood of getting into Bristol" by Jeff Odell in 1999. This found that, on the whole, of all the students who entered the University of Bristol with excellent A levels, those who came from weaker schools gained better degrees than the students from stronger schools.

iii) "Gender Differences in Educational Attainment: The Case of University Students in England and Wales" by Robert McNabb, Sarmistha Pal and Peter Sloane was published in Economica in 2002. This found that A-level point scores have a strong positive effect on degree attainment.

iv) "Who does best at university" HEFCE 2002 concluded that young full-time entrants with lower A level points scores are more likely to drop out, to repeat years and, if they graduate, they are less likely to get a good degree. The authors also argue that admissions tutors should be exploring new ways (in addition to A level attainment) to identify performance. This report can be downloaded from HEFCE's website at http://www.hefce.ac.uk/Learning/whodoes/. The HEFCE are continuing to refine and develop their analysis and a fuller report will be published later this year.

v) "Fair Enough? Wider access to university by identifying potential to succeed". This was published in 2003 by UUK. It identified objective criteria to build on existing systems and more accurately predict applicants' potential, particularly those from backgrounds not traditionally associated with higher education. This can be downloaded from http://www.universitiesuk.ac.uk/fairenough/.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with higher education institutions to ensure that they take account of changes to the curriculum proposed in "14 to 19: Opportunity for Excellence". [102710]

Margaret Hodge: Representatives from higher education were invited to each of the 58 regional consultation workshops on the 14 to 19 Green Paper, along with representatives from secondary education, further education colleges, employers and other stakeholders. Additional events were also held to discuss the proposals with representatives from higher education including a presentation of the proposals to the Universities UK main Committee of Vice Chancellors.

The Working Group for 14 to 19 Reform, chaired by Mike Tomlinson, will consult a range of interested bodies, including higher education institutions, as it considers the longer-term agenda for change and develops its proposals for a new unified qualifications framework. The Group's membership includes two University Vice Chancellors.

Our regional consultations on the White Paper, "The Future of Higher Education", will include discussion of the development of more work-based degrees such as Foundation Degrees and progression from the 14 to 19 phase to higher education.

Top-up Fees

13. Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on top-up fees. [102715]

Margaret Hodge: From 2006, we will give universities the freedom to set tuition fees, up to a maximum of £3,000. Universities will set out in Access Agreements how they will safeguard and promote access when they set their fees.

In addition, no student or parent will have to pay fees up-front. We will offer loans for fees, subsidised in the same way as the current maintenance loans, with a fair and equitable system of repayments.

Emergency Planning

14. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he last issued guidance to schools on procedures in the event of a hostile biological or chemical incident. [102716]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: All schools in England have been made aware, most recently earlier this week, that they can get advice on emergency planning via the UK Resilience website. This includes advice on terrorism.

First Aid

15. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he is taking to encourage the teaching of basic first aid to children in schools. [102717]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Basic Aid Training is included in the curriculum as part of the framework for Personal Social and Health Education. The aim is to ensure that young children are safe within and outside their school environment. In primary schools, children learn the rules relating to health and safety and basic emergency aid. In secondary schools, young people develop the skills to cope with emergency situations that require basic aid procedures including resuscitation techniques.

School Results

16. John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps his Department is taking to improve secondary school results in coalfield areas. [102718]

Mr. Miliband: My Department has set a number of challenging targets aimed at raising the attainment of secondary school pupils in coalfield and other areas, including floor targets at Key Stage 2, 3 and GCSE level. In addition, my Department has targeted measures such as Education Action Zones and Excellence in Cities, to raise standards in particularly disadvantaged areas. These focus on improving the quality of teaching and learning, tackling social exclusion and providing support to families and pupils.

Early-years Premises

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many early years settings have (a) opened and (b) closed in each year since 1973 for which information is available. [93431]

Maria Eagle: Information on the number of maintained nursery schools that have opened and closed each year is shown in the table. Figures are available from 1995 when the Department's database of educational establishments was created.

Number of maintained nursery schools which opened and closed each year
1995 to 2002—England

	Closed	Opened
1998	12	2
1999	8	1
2000	15	2

Information on other types of early years settings that have opened and closed since 1973 is not available.

All four year olds have been able to access a free, part-time early education place since September 1998. Since September 1999, we have invested substantially in new free early years education places for three year olds. The number of free early years education places taken up by three year olds increased from 214,200 in 1997 to 408,200 in 2002, an increase of 194,000 places. We are committed to providing all three year olds, whose parents want one, with free early years education place by April 2004.

Education (Northampton)

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) pupils and (b) teachers there were in Northampton in (i) primary, (ii) middle and (iii) upper schools in (A) the latest period for which figures are available and (B) each of the past four years. [100799]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the table.

Education Funding

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of his Departmental budget was spent on (a) pre-school education, (b) school age education up to sixth form level, (c) sixth form school and college education, (d) further education and (e) higher education in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement [99819]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The amount spent by the Department on various functions is set out in table 4.2 of the 2002 Departmental Report for the Department for Education and Skills (Command Number 5402).

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the grants funded by his Department for which (a) LEAs, (b) primary and secondary schools, (c) further education institutions, (d) higher education institutions, (e) individual teachers and (f) students may apply; how much funding was made available in the last financial year; how many awards were made; and what their administrative costs were in each case. [99946]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Department makes grant payments to a wide range of education, voluntary and private organisations. Organisations and individuals can also apply to and receive grants from our NDPBs and other agencies, for which we hold no central records. Therefore this question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 24 February 2003, Official Report, columns 164–65W, on pupil funding, for what reasons Havering receives lower funding than other London Boroughs for pupils aged (a) five to 10 and (b) 11 to 15; and what plans he has to increase funding for schools in Havering. [102049]

Mr. Miliband: In 2003–04, Havering's Education Formula Spending Share is increasing by 3.2 per cent. per pupil. In addition we will continue to provide Standards Fund grant funding for priority programmes to support improvements as in previous years: for 2003–04 Havering's Standards Fund allocation so far is £4.2 million not including the LEA contribution. Havering's schools will also continue to benefit from significant increases in the School Standards Grant.

In 2003–04 Havering's average level of funding per primary pupil is £2,237. Its average level of funding per secondary pupil is £2,956.

Overall, the per pupil funding in Havering is lower than in London authorities because it benefits less than other London authorities from those aspects in the funding formula which reflect the additional costs of recruiting and retaining staff in high-cost areas (the Area Cost Adjustment—ACA) and the additional costs of educating deprived pupils.

The ACA for London has three values: 1.2624 (inner); 1.1447 (outer London west); and 1.0912 (outer London east). Havering receives the ACA for those in outer London east: its lower value reflects the lower general wage rates in outer London east compared with those in outer London west. On the measures of deprivation in EFSS, Havering is 10th out of the 13 outer London east authorities for both income support and the working families tax credit and has the lowest proportion of pupils with English as an additional language and low achieving ethnic groups.

We recognise that the recommendations of the School Teachers' Review Body will place an additional burden on schools in Havering. Consequently our response to the STRB report proposes an additional grant for those London authorities with a low increase in their education formula spending share or a floor increase in their Revenue Support Grant. Havering's share will be £475,000: we intend to pay this grant in May; and the LEA will be required to pass it on to school budgets.

Education Targets

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many education targets his Department has (a) introduced and (b) failed to attain since 1997. [102292]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department publishes progress against all its outstanding PSA targets in its Annual Departmental Report and Autumn Performance Report. Progress against our CSR 98 targets was reported most recently in the 2002 autumn report, published in November 2002, together with commentary where appropriate. A copy of the report is available from the House of Commons Library.

English Baccalaureate

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his assessment is of the impact of the proposed move towards an English baccalaureate on an optional foundation year of study after GCSE. [101883]

Mr. Miliband: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 11 March 2003, Official Report, column 168W, in which we explained that we have asked a Working Group chaired by Mike Tomlinson to take forward work on possible longer-term 14 to 19 developments, including a unified framework of qualifications for this age group. It would be premature at this stage to be developing specific baccalaureate models before the Group has reported or to make any assessment of its effect on post-GCSE study.

Foreign Language Teaching

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 3 March 2003, ref: 99626, how many (a) French, (b) German and (c) Spanish teachers qualified in each year since 1995. [102154]

Mr. Miliband: The table provides a breakdown of the numbers qualifying as teachers in England[1] with a modern language as their subject.

	Calendar year of qualification[2]
Modern languages	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001

German	210	200	250	250	210	200	[3]—
Spanish	50	70	140	140	110	130	[3]—
Other modern languages	520	560	50	50	50	70	[3]—
Total	1,590	1,590	1,510	1,520	1,410	1,260	1,390

[1] Includes those trained through the Open University but excludes those qualifying through employment based routes.

[2] The data for 1995 to 2000 are from the DfES Database of Teachers' Records (DTR). A new subject coding system was introduced in 1997 therefore the 1995 and 1996 subject breakdown within modern languages is not comparable with later years. The 2001 figure is taken from the Teacher Training Agency's (TTA) Performance Profiles because 2001 DTR data are not available. The subject breakdown within modern languages is not available for 2001.

GCSEs

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the GCSE results were of the pupils who did not achieve level 4 at Key Stage 2 in 1997. [102290]

Mr. Miliband: Of those pupils who attempted GCSEs in 2002 but had not achieved level 4 or above at Key Stage 2 in 1997, 12 per cent. achieved five or more GCSE grades A*-C and 83 per cent. achieved five or more GCSE grades A*-G.

The answer is based only on pupils who attempted GCSEs as information on the percentage of pupils from KS2 who did not attempt GCSEs is not collected centrally.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many grammar schools there were in each education authority in (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) 2000. [102424]

Mr. Miliband: The numbers of grammar schools as defined under the 1998 School Framework Act in each education authority for the year 2000 are shown in Table 1. Prior to 1998 schools reported themselves as grammar schools in the Annual Schools' Census. Data from the Census for the years 1980 and 1990 are shown in Table 2. The data in the two tables are not directly comparable.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his Answer of 11 February 2003, Official Report, column 693W, on modern apprenticeship programmes, if he will make a statement on the achievement rates of full national vocational qualification (a) level 2 for Foundation Modern Apprenticeships and (b) level 3 for Advanced Modern Apprenticeships from 1994 to 2001. [98908]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: My earlier answer to the hon. Member provided figures for the achievement of the main National Vocational Qualifications (NVQs) within Modern Apprenticeship (MA) frameworks. These have risen substantially since 1997. Over half of Advanced Modern Apprentice trainees now complete their level 3 NVQ; other positive outcomes include progression to higher education and continuing with the same employer.

On 25 February, the Government launched a new Modern Apprenticeship Task Force, under Sir Roy Gardner, to encourage a higher level of employer commitment to MAs. We expect, through their work and that of the Learning and Skills Council (LSC), retention and completion rates to rise further.

MA framework completion involves achievement of the appropriate NVQ, Key Skills and Technical Certificate qualifications. The collection of information on whole framework completion was a recommendation of the MA Advisory Committee. The LSC aims to publish NVQ attainment and framework completion data from spring 2003.

Opportunity Bursaries

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of 18-year-olds from the borough of Redcar and Cleveland who will meet the parental income eligibility criteria for Opportunity Bursaries in 2003 would be eligible for the proposed Higher Education Grant. [102711]

Margaret Hodge: The Department does not collect information about parental income by local education authority area. Opportunity Bursaries are not awarded solely on the basis of parental income. 11,000 Bursaries are available for those entering English higher education institutions in 2003. Students with Opportunity Bursaries will remain eligible to receive their payments in years 2 and 3 of the course, when the new higher education grant is introduced for new students from 2004. Eligibility for the Higher Education Grant will depend on household income. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Lynne Jones) on 6 February 2003, Official Report, column 358W, that a decision on the income threshold at which the full £1,000 is payable will be announced later this year.

Primary Schools

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to extend the Excellence in Cities programme to primary schools; and if he will make a statement. [102696]

Mr. Miliband: We extended the Excellence in Cities programme to primary schools in the 24 Phase 1 authorities in September 2000. We plan to roll out the programme to primary schools in the remaining 34 Phase 2 and 3 authorities from April 2004. We are currently considering with headteachers, partnership co-ordinators and Ofsted how best this might be done—learning from the experience in the phase 1 schools, primary schools in Education Action Zones and Excellence Clusters.

Pupil Mobility

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research his Department has conducted to assess the impact of increased pupil mobility on discipline in schools. [101366]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Pupil mobility is a permanent feature of our school system. There is no evidence that it is increasing. However, there is evidence that very high rates of mobility at particular schools can have detrimental effects on levels of attainment. The Department is therefore supporting a project at 50 schools with very high rates of mobility to help them develop and implement action plans to tackle problems related to behaviour and attendance as well as attainment. This work will also lead to good practice guidelines to help other schools with high mobility.

School Circulars

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the circulars that have been sent by his Department to (a) primary school, (b) secondary schools and (c) local education authorities since 1 March 2002; and how many pages each circular contained. [99488]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

School Federations

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 4 March 2003, ref 100049, what the purpose is of publishing exam results for federations of schools. [102155]

Mr. Miliband: The purpose is to enable participating schools and other interested parties to measure the impact of federating on the overall attainment of schools within the Federation and to recognise the joint efforts of schools in a federation to raise standards. Exam results will continue to be published for individual schools as well.

School Funding

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was spent on schools in Somerset, in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03, at 2001–02 prices, broken down to show (a) local government spending, (b) central government credit approval and (c) central government expenditure by each available category; and if he will make a statement. [99823]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested for parts (a) and (b) is contained in the table. However the Department does not hold data that would answer part (c) of the question.

Social Care

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the grants funded by his Department for social care for which organisations may apply; how much funding was made in the last financial year; how many awards were made; and what their administrative costs were. [99947]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Department does not fund any specific grants for the purpose of providing social care.

Sure Start

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funding has been allocated to the Harwich constituency under the Sure Start scheme. [96912]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Pursuant to my reply on 4 March 2003, Official Report, columns 965–66W, there is one Sure Start Local Programme operating in the Harwich constituency—a Round 3 programme in West Clacton and Jaywick that was approved in June 2001. It has revenue funding of £601,996 for 2002–03. Funding for capital projects of £400,000 has been approved to date, including funding for a toddler playground and the purchase and refurbishment of a property for a Sure Start Centre. The programme can apply for approval of capital funding up to £1 million. Essex county council is the accountable body.

Plans for a 'mini' Sure Start programme are currently being considered by the Sure Start Unit. The Harwich 'mini' Sure Start, if approved, will receive up to £100,000 each year for revenue expenditure and funding for capital expenditure of up to £250,000 in total.

Teachers (Performance Management)

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Performance Management System for the teaching profession; and if he will make a statement. [102695]

Mr. Miliband: Following the introduction of the new performance management arrangements in 2000–01 the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted) looked at how they were being implemented in a sample of schools. They found that even at such an early stage performance management had been introduced in all the schools surveyed and that it had been adopted satisfactorily or better in four fifths of those schools. Ofsted also found that headteachers, other senior managers, teachers and governors were positive about the contribution that performance management could make to school improvement. However we recognise that more needs to be done before performance management can fulfil its potential in supporting school and teacher improvement. I am sending my hon. Friend a copy of a speech I gave on 27 January this year on this subject.

University Funding

Mr. Bryant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent assessment he has made of the capital needs of UK universities. [102708]

Margaret Hodge: Reports commissioned from JM Consulting by the Higher Education Funding Council for England into the capital requirements of higher education institutions in the UK concluded that there was a total shortfall of some £8 billion of investment, consisting of a research infrastructure backlog of £3.2 billion, and a teaching infrastructure backlog of £4.6 billion, plus a need to double expenditure on maintenance. The Secretary of State announced in January 2003 that capital funding for higher education institutions in England will increase by 77 per cent. for research and by 185 per cent. for teaching and learning in cash terms between 2002–03 and 2005–06.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

US Administration (Representations)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British Government made the representations to the US administration to which the President of the Council referred in his oral answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith) on 6 February 2003, Official Report, column 454. [102484]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since entry into force of the Chemical Weapons Convention in 1997, the United States has accepted the continuous monitoring of the destruction of its chemical weapons (CW) stockpiles, as well as regular OPCW inspections of its former CW production facilities. Inspections at US industrial facilities only began in May 2000, as a result of a delay in putting in place the necessary domestic enabling legislation. During that time the United Kingdom regularly urged the US to remedy this deficiency at the earliest opportunity. To date the United States has in fact hosted more CW inspections than any other State Party, and the bulk of the inspector-person days expended by the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons have been in the United States.

Commonwealth Day

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to celebrate Commonwealth Day 2003; and what total budget his Department has made available for the celebration of Commonwealth Day 2003. [101979]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary received an invitation to attend the Observance for Commonwealth Day at Westminster Abbey, but was unable to attend. A Cabinet Minister will represent the Government at the Observance. The FCO has given the Joint Commonwealth Societies' Council £10,000 towards the cost of organising the Observance for Commonwealth Day at Westminster Abbey. Our Embassies and High Commissions will also be arranging events to mark the occasion, but information about expenditure on these events is not yet available.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with each Commonwealth country regarding Commonwealth Day 2003. [101980]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. Each member country is responsible for organising its own events to mark the Day.

Cruise Missiles

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterpart in the US Government about the loading of cruise missiles on to B52 bombers at RAF Fairford in Gloucestershire. [102418]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. Hoon) to the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker) on 11 March, Official Report, column 183–4W.

Iraq

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to ensure that, in the event of UK involvement in military conflict in Iraq, prisoners and persons detained will be protected by the 1949 Geneva Convention and accommodated in facilities that meet appropriate UN standard minimum rules for the treatment of prisoners. [100889]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

The Government will act in conformity with the Geneva Convention and international law.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on US plans for US military administration in Iraq following military action. [101597]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No decision has been made to launch military action in Iraq. If military action becomes necessary to enforce Iraq to disarm, a US-led military coalition will provide security and facilitate the provision of humanitarian relief for the Iraqi people, in accordance with international law.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the Canadian proposals on Iraq as the basis for a resolution at the United Nations Security Council. [102535]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All proposals on Iraq, from whatever source, have been carefully examined.

The Canadian proposal contains a number of sensible and useful suggestions, some of which have been incorporated into our current position.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the steps taken to authenticate the documentation on which the claims in the Government dossier that Iraq attempted to buy uranium from Niger were based. [102666]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There were no claims made in the Government Dossier that Iraq had attempted to procure uranium specifically from Niger.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the costs associated with the return of the UN arms inspectors to Iraq to (a) the UN, (b) each member of the Security Council and (c) other UN members. [102668]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the terms of UN Security Council resolution 1284, the UNMOVIC and IAEA inspection regimes for Iraq are funded by the diversion of resources from the Oil-For-Food programme. They are, therefore, effectively self-financing.

The United Kingdom has met some ad-hoc requests for funding for training and other logistical support for UNMOVIC and the IAEA since the establishment of the new inspection regime in March 2000. The cost of this support to date has been approximately £1.2 million.

We do not have figures relating to any financial support provided by other countries.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the potential environmental consequences arising from military action in Iraq; and what provision he is making to minimise these. [102820]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No decision to launch military action against Iraq has been taken.

CABINET OFFICE

Sir David Omand

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to his answer of 5 December 2002, Official Report, column 925, to the right hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin), what functions are performed by the 724 other staff working for Sir David Omand; how much this cost the Cabinet Office in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [99221]

Mr. Alexander: The 724 other staff referred to in the answer of 5 December are non-senior civil servants. In December 2002 the total salary costs of non-senior civil servants in the units that report to Sir David Omand were £2.1 million. These units are: the Intelligence and Security Secretariat; the Civil Contingencies Secretariat; the Communication Group; the Machinery of Government Secretariat; the Government Information and Communication Service; the Corporate Services Group; ministerial offices; and Sir David's private office.

PRIME MINISTER

Lord Levy

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the visits undertaken at his request by Lord Levy since 1 January, indicating in each case the purpose of the visit. [102772]

The Prime Minister: In his capacity as the Prime Minister's envoy, Lord Levy travelled to Ramallah on 23 January and to Washington on 19 February to update and exchange views on the Middle East peace process.

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what factors he takes into account when deciding that Lord Levy, in preference to a Foreign Office Minister, should undertake a foreign trip on his behalf. [102773]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Ms Coffey) on 9 July 2001, Official Report, column 350W.

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the members of the US administration Lord Levy has met while acting as his envoy. [102774]

The Prime Minister: In his capacity as the Prime Minister's envoy, Lord Levy has met a range of contacts, including Richard Armitage (Deputy Secretary of State); Bill Burns (Assistant Secretary of State, State Department); David Satterfield (Deputy Assistant Secretary, State Department); Martin Indyk, Dan Kurtzer, Aaron Miller, Rust Deming and Richard Haass (all State Department).

He has also met Elliott Abrams, Bruce Riedel and Flint Everett (National Security Council), Scooter Libby and John Hannah (Office of the Vice President), General Anthony Zinni (US Special Envoy) and Senator George Mitchell (Chairman of the Sharm el-Sheikh Fact-Finding Committee).

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Defence of Provocation

20. Linda Gilroy: To ask the Solicitor-General if she will make a statement on the defence of provocation, with particular reference to domestic violence. [102722]

The Solicitor-General: Provocation acts as a partial defence to murder and serves to reduce the offence to manslaughter.

The Home Secretary and the Law Officers together with the Director of Public Prosecutions are currently considering whether there are grounds for a review of the law of provocation and a direction to the Sentencing Advisory Panel.

24. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Solicitor-General how many cases prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service involved the defence of provocation in the last year for which statistics are available. [102726]

The Solicitor-General: Currently the CPS does not record statistics on the number of cases involving the defence of provocation. However, part of the work being carried out by the Law Officers and the DPP in considering whether there are grounds for a review of the law will include monitoring exercise in which CCP's will look at all homicides in their area, particularly those involving the defence of provocation.

British Transport Police

21. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Solicitor-General how many staff were employed by the Crown Prosecution Service on cases brought by the British Transport Police in each of the last four years. [102723]

The Solicitor-General: Nearly all operational staff within the 42 areas and the headquarters of the Crown Prosecution Service are likely from time to time to handle cases submitted by the British Transport Police covering England and Wales. There is no central record of who in the CPS has, and has not, handled a British Transport Police case and it would involve a disproportionate cost to survey staff to ascertain this information.

Race Hate Crimes

22. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Solicitor-General what her policy is on prosecution of race hate crimes. [102724]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service reviews all allegations of inciting racial hatred in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors.

All such allegations are considered individually, on their own merits. However when considering the public interest of such prosecutions the Code for Crown Prosecutors specifically states that > "a prosecution is likely to be needed if: the offence was motivated by any form of discrimination against the victim's ethnic or national origin".

All such prosecutions are dealt with by the Casework Directorate where they are reviewed by a team of specialist lawyers and no prosecution takes place without the consent of the Attorney-General.

Serious Fraud Office

23. Hugh Bayley: To ask the Solicitor-General what the priorities of the Serious Fraud Office are. [102725]

The Solicitor-General: The main priority of the Serious Fraud Office is the investigation and prosecution of serious and complex fraud.

Other priorities include raising public awareness of the dangers of fraud and maintaining confidence in the UK's business and financial institutions.

The Attorney-General and I are keen to support the SFO in their work which is why I met the Federation of Small Businesses the CPS and the SFO on 5 March to share their views on ways of combating fraud perpetrated against businesses.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Construction Industry (Accidents)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment the Health and Safety Executive has made of the risk to members of the public from activities of construction companies who are involved in accidents. [102323]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The risk from construction work to the public can be significant. Those who create the risks are therefore legally required to control them. The Health and Safety Executive has issued practical guidance "Protecting the public—your next move" to help those in the construction industry to understand their legal responsibilities to the public and to explain how to eliminate hazards and control risks which could affect the public. The Health and Safety Executive also runs regular publicity campaigns to discourage children from playing on construction sites.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the number of persons claiming Jobseeker's Allowance while working in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [102776]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information requested is in the table.

Jobseeker's Allowance claimants declaring part-time earnings (under 16 hours per week)

HEALTH

Accident and Emergency Admissions

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS patients were admitted to wards from accident and emergency departments within (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four and (e) more than four hours, after being first seen by a doctor or consultant in (i) February 1997 and (ii) the latest month for which figures are available. [97838]

Mr. Lammy: The Department collects quarterly data regarding waiting times in accident and emergency, post decision to admit.

The latest month for which figures are available is Quarter 2, July to September 2002–03—388,247 patients were placed in a bed in a ward within two hours of a decision to admit. 120,915 patients were placed in a bed in a ward within two to four hours of a decision to admit and 509,229 of patients were placed in a ward within four hours of a decision to admit.

In Quarter 4, January to March 1996–97, 360,246 patients were placed in a bed in a ward within two hours of a decision to admit. 58,540 patients were placed in a bed in a ward within two to four hours of a decision to admit and 293,145 patients were placed in a ward within four hours of a decision to admit.

Care Homes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly residents of each London borough have been placed in care homes outside London in the last 12 months; and how many people from outside London have been placed in care homes inside London in the last 12 months, broken down by social services department. [101309]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not centrally available.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter to him dated 27 January 2003 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Gorton Constituency Labour Party. [100684]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 12 March.

Dementia

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he will take to provide people with dementia requiring long-term care with specialist, trained care staff; and what provision has been made under the free nursing care policy for such provision; [102040]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of his decision to limit the NHS contribution to funding long-term care to the cost of registered nurse time spent providing, delegating and supervising care to people with dementia. [102041]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 12 March 2003]: In response to comments from the Alzheimer's Society, draft supplementary guidance on national health service funded nursing care, that was issued for consultation on 20 December 2002, highlighted the importance of nurses assessing people's mental health as well as physical health needs, particularly in cases of dementia. This will be reflected in forthcoming guidance.

As far as NHS-funded nursing care is concerned, people with dementia should be treated no differently from people with other conditions. The level of input from a registered nurse is determined at the appropriate level of funding. Care homes that specialise in dementia care may provide more appropriate care for some people with dementia than a care home providing nursing care.

The older people's national service framework (NSF) sets out to ensure that people with dementia have access to integrated mental health services, provided by the NHS and councils, to ensure effective diagnosis, treatment and support for them and for their carers. Work to support implementation of the NSF includes a strand on work force development. There is a dementia subgroup of the older people's care group work force team, and this is looking at the steps that need to be taken to ensure that there are the right skills and numbers of staff in place to care for people with dementia.

Dentistry

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when retrograde amalgam fillings for teeth were first introduced in England and Wales. [98352]

Mr. Lammy: As far as records indicate, the treatment has been used since at least the inception of the national health service in 1948.

Mental Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people who would be subject to compulsory treatment, whether resident or non-resident, under the proposals contained in the draft Mental Health Bill, who are currently exempt under the Mental Health Act 1983. [100820]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 4 March 2003]: The 1983 Mental Act liberalised the law to incorporate more tolerant public attitudes in relation to sexual preference so that this could no longer be viewed as a condition of mental disorder. Also excluded were people who are substance or alcohol misusers.

However, people with psychosis exacerbated or caused by substance misuse, including alcohol, can be treated under the 1983 Act. A misunderstanding of section 1(3) of the Act has resulted in many instances in substance abusers being denied the treatment they need.

Proposals under the Bill will remove all exclusions to ensure that those who fulfil all the conditions for compulsion receive the help that they need.

The draft Mental Health Bill proposes a single broad definition of mental disorder, coupled with tightly drawn conditions that must be satisfied for compulsory powers to be used. It is the intention that the strict conditions will ensure that the powers are only used where the patient is suffering from a mental disorder which is serious enough to require treatment under the care of a mental health consultant; the risk to self or others warrants it and appropriate treatment is available for the individual patient. This approach would remove exclusions and the "treatability" requirement so that there are no arbitrary obstacles to the treatment of anyone who satisfies the conditions for compulsion.

While the new legislation will lead to some change in the group of people treated, overall it is not the intention that more people will be subject to compulsion under the Bill. Investment under the NHS Plan and service improvements under the national service framework for mental health, such as assertive outreach, crisis resolution and early intervention, will help to provide more effective care and ensure that fewer people become so ill that they need compulsory treatment.

Neurologists

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many neurologists are practising in England; what estimate he has made of the shortfall in neurologists; what action he is taking to encourage more neurologists to practise; what effect the shortfall of neurologists has on the speed of diagnosis for motor neurone disease sufferers; and if he will make a statement. [100107]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to a significant expansion in the national health service work force. The NHS Plan set a target of 7,500 more consultants and 1,000 more specialist registrars by March 2004, over a 1999 baseline.

Between September 1999 and March 2002, the total number of consultants increased by 13 per cent. During the same time period, the number of consultant neurologists increased by 23 per cent. By 2004, we expect there to be an additional 78 trained specialists available to take up consultant posts in neurology.

We are encouraging more doctors to practice neurology by expanding the number of specialist registrar (SpR) opportunities in neurology. For 2003–04, central funding will be distributed to support the implementation of 10 additional SpR posts in neurology. Trusts will also have the opportunity to create up to 20 locally funded SpR training opportunities.

The long-term conditions care group workforce team covers conditions such as neurology, diabetes and renal services. It is developing the workforce strategy to underpin the national service frameworks for these conditions. It covers all aspects of work force planning and development including medical and nursing, allied health professions and social care professions.

Motor neurone disease is often a difficult clinical diagnosis because the pattern of symptoms varies between patients and often mimics other, quite different diseases. The Department has introduced targets to limit the maximum length of time a patient should expect to wait to see a neurologist to 26 weeks.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) NHS consultants and (b) NHS consultant vacancies there are in Greater London; and how many of each there were in May 1997. [101319]

Mr. Hutton: Information on consultant vacancies and consultants in post is shown in the tables. Vacancy figures were only collected from March 1999. The increase in vacancies reflects the action being taken by trusts to expand the consultant workforce.

NHS University

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to apply for the Royal Charter for the NHS University. [100504]

Mr. Hutton: The National Health Service University (NHSU) aims to become an awarding and accrediting institution in its own right, by meeting the standards required to become a university. NHSU will apply to the Privy Council in its own right. The decision to grant university status will be then made by the Privy Council.

NHSU have set up a working group with the Higher Education Funding Council, with members drawn from the Higher Education Funding Council, NHSU, Department for Education and Skills, the Department of Health and the Quality Assurance Agency. This group will look at the appropriate processes and mechanisms for achieving university status, to offer advice and to draw up an action plan setting out the steps to be taken.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Advertising Costs (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102331]

Mr. Leslie: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Capita

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many meetings (a) he and Ministers in his Department, (b) special advisers in his Department and (c) officials have had with Capita employees and members of the Capita board since May 2001; what the purpose was of each meeting; and if he will make a statement. [98578]

Mr. Leslie: As with previous Administrations, and in line with exemption 7 of the "Code of Practice on Access to Government Information", it is not this Government's normal practice to release details of specific meetings or their content, as some of these discussions may have taken place on a confidential basis. All such contacts are conducted in accordance with the rules set out in the "Ministerial Code", the "Civil Service Code", and "Guidance for Civil Servants: Contacts with Lobbyists". Copies of these documents are available in the Libraries of the House.

Children's Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 262W, on looked after children, if he will set out the reasons for the delay in publication of the Social Exclusion Unit report. [102527]

Mrs. Roche: The Social Exclusion Unit report on the education of children in care will need to take account of the proposals in the forthcoming Green Paper on Children at Risk. It will be published shortly after the Green Paper, which is due for publication in the spring of 2003.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many properties were compulsorily purchased by the Housing Corporation in (a) 1999, (b) 2000, (c) 2001 and (d) 2002. [102409]

Mr. McNulty: The Housing Corporation purchased no properties during those years.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the cost was of the (a) Social Exclusion Unit and (b) Deputy Prime Minister's Central Policy Group in each year from 1997–98 to 2004–05 (planned). [99885]

Mr. Leslie: The information is as follows:

(a) The following table shows the total administration expenditure profile for the Social Exclusion Unit for each year 1997–98 to 2004–05. The SEU was located within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on its creation on 29 May 2002.

(b) The Deputy Prime Minister's Central Policy Group was in existence from July 2001 to June 2002 in the Cabinet Office. Administration expenditure of the Central Policy Group for 2001–02 was £491,000.

Firefighters

Mr. Weir: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the relationship between the projected cuts in the number of firefighters under the Bain proposals and the proposals of the Pathfinder report. [100120]

Mr. Raynsford: The Independent Review of the Fire Service recommended a new and more flexible approach to fire cover. It suggested that resources should be deployed to ensure that the right resources such as firefighters, fire stations, and fire appliances are in the right place at the right time to save lives where they are at risk. This new approach is not about cutting fire stations or firefighters. It is about better targeting Fire Service resources at identified risks in a cost-effective manner.

The Task Group on the Fire Cover Review (whose report is widely referred to as the "Pathfinder report") developed a Fire Service Emergency Cover Methodology. This was used by the Task Group to predict resource and personnel requirements, and their related cost. This was done both for the 11 fire brigades which participated in the Pathfinder trials and, by extrapolation, nationally. However, while the Task Group endorsed the basic methodology, a number of teething problems led the group to reject the detailed calculations, which are now being repeated following further work. The Fire Cover Review has developed a model to inform decisions about the allocation of emergency response resources (fire stations, red engines, and crews). The model has been tested twice in computer simulations. The first test run suggested that you could spend twice the current Fire Service budget without achieving much reduction in risk. The second test run suggested that you could halve expenditure without much increase in current levels of loss of life and property.

These two simulations have set out two extreme cases. But taken together, and even allowing for some technical errors which have come to light in the early results, the findings suggest that substantial improvements in Fire Service efficiency and effectiveness are achievable. This judgement has been endorsed by the Bain report.

The report of the Fire Cover Review was published in draft on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister website on 23 December 2002 (www.odpm.gov.uk). Copies of the final report of the Independent Review of the Fire Service, and the draft Fire Cover Review report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how the cuts in the number of firefighters envisaged by the Bain report would be broken down by Fire Brigade regions. [100121]

Mr. Raynsford: The Independent Review of the Fire Service recommended a new and more flexible approach to fire cover in which resources would be deployed in the right place at the right time to meet identified risks to life and property. This new approach is not about cutting the number of firefighters. Under these proposals, democratically accountable fire authorities, acting on the professional advice of Chief Fire Officers, would take decisions on the provision of fire cover. The review considered that the recommendations it made could be implemented without the need for compulsory redundancies.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he intends to revise fire service guidance on the employment of people with diabetes as firefighters. [102411]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is reviewing the existing guidance to the fire service on the employment of people with diabetes as fire fighters. Key interest groups are being consulted, and the review will take account of all relevant legislation.

Housing

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how small local schemes will be funded following the creation of the single housing pot, with particular reference to schemes outside the areas earmarked for housing expansion or housing market renewals. [101831]

Mr. McNulty: Local housing authorities and housing associations will continue to invest in improving existing stock or increasing the supply of affordable housing in accordance with priorities identified in local housing strategies. Under the new single regional housing pot the resources provided by central Government to support this housing investment will increasingly be directed to areas or types of expenditure identified as priorities in regional housing strategies.

Parish Councils

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his oral answer of 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 806, on parish councillors, what the evidential basis was of the information given in his reply. [102137]

Mr. Leslie: My reply to the hon. Member for Eddisbury (Mr. O'Brien) on 5 March drew on information in departmental and Standards Board records of the number of parish councillors who have written to say that they have resigned as a result of the requirements in the code of conduct, and on published estimates of the number of parish councillors in England (see 'Local Council Administration', sixth edition, Butterworths 2002).

Pathfinder Scheme (Swarcliffe Estate)

Colin Burgon: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the progress of the Pathfinder Scheme for the Swarcliffe estate in the Elmet constituency. [102792]

Mr. McNulty: The Housing Private Finance Initiative (PFI) pathfinder for the Swarcliffe estate in Leeds, is due to reach contract signature before the end of 2003.

Pollution (Fines)

Norman Baker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made or plans of the effectiveness of fines levied by local authorities on polluters preventing (a) further incidences of pollution by the polluters and (b) incidences of pollution from others who have not previously polluted; what changes are planned; and if he will make a statement. [99257]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

Part 1 of the Environment Protection Act 1990 specifies that fines be levied by courts and not by the local enforcing authority. The authority may however bring proceedings against the accused in a Court of Law.

No assessment has yet been made of the preventive effect of fines levied against environmental offenders. My Department takes the view that the level of fines being imposed for pollution offences is generally too low. We are now working with the Environment Agency and with others, especially the Magistrates Association, to ensure that magistrates are trained and have an increased awareness of the implications of polluting activity and consequently impose more realistic fines. To this end, the Association recently circulated relevant training material to all its 28,000 members.

The Government are also exploring the possibility of developing general guidelines on sentencing for environmental offences. To this end, my Department has recently commissioned research to examine penalties for environmental offences and to aim to establish a solid body of information, which could be used as a basis for future action. The research team is due to report in the summer.

Public Bodies (Greater London)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the value was of each grant paid to public sector bodies in London in the last year before the creation of the Greater London Authority for transport and highways purposes, including the highways and transport element of rate support grant; what sum was paid to the Greater London Authority in the last year for which information is available; and if he will make a statement on the methodology for determining that grant. [101550]

Mr. Raynsford: Grants paid to public sector bodies in London in 1999/00 were as follows (figures in fan):

Traffic Director for London	24
Traffic Control Systems Unit/Woolwich Ferry/Consultancies	8
London Transport (incl. London Underground	816
Docklands Light Railway	29
Highways Agency London spend (est.)	140
London Borough LTP allocations	84
Highways Rate Support Grant	223
Total:	1,324

In addition to these figures, a proportion of the expenditure on National Rail would have been spent in London.

In 2002/03, the sum paid to the Greater London Authority in the form of GLA transport grant is £1,024,118,000. This does not include any funding for the London Underground, National Rail, or for rate support grant paid to the London boroughs and TfL. No account of concessionary fares funding for London boroughs has been taken with regard to these figures.

Decisions on the level of GLA transport grant are taken by Ministers during comprehensive spending reviews, based on an assessment of London's need and competing national priorities. Grant is determined annually, following consultation with the Mayor of London.

Quarries

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many quarries within the Peak District National Park are operating without the requirement for modern working standards required by schedule 13 of the Environment Act 1995; and what steps his Department is taking to ensure all quarries in the Peak District National Park are reviewed under schedule 13 of the Environment Act 1995. [102694]

Mr. McNulty: This information is not available centrally, because the review of existing mineral sites in this area is the responsibility of the Peak District National Park Authority. Guidance on the use of schedule 13 by all mineral planning authorities is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 14: "Environment Act 1995—Review of Mineral Planning Permissions".

Smoking

Chris Grayling: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what policy his Department has adopted on smoking in the workplace. [100936]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister operates a no smoking policy except in specifically designated smoking rooms.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Norman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many staff were employed by local authorities to operate and administer speed cameras in each year since 1997. [102230]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

This information is not held centrally.

Fire Authorities

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the authorities which benefited from the coastline factor in the fire service formula; and what proportion of the aggregate fire service FSS allocation was distributed on the basis of the coastline factor. [101549]

Mr. Raynsford: 1.5 per cent. of the aggregate fire service FSS allocation was distributed on the basis of the coastline factor. The following fire authorities benefited:

Cornwall;

Cumbria;

Isle of Wight;

Isles of Scilly;

Lincolnshire;

Merseyside;

Norfolk;

Northumberland;

Somerset;

Suffolk;

Tyne & Wear; and

West Sussex.

In addition the following authorities benefited on behalf of their combined fire authority:

Bath and north east Somerset, Bristol, north Somerset and south Gloucestershire for the Avon Fire Authority; Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Redcar and Cleveland and Stockton-on-Tees for the Cleveland Fire Authority; Plymouth, Torbay and Devon for the Devon Fire Authority; Bournemouth, Poole and Dorset for the Dorset Fire Authority; Darlington and Durham for the Durham Fire Authority, Brighton and Hove and East Sussex for the East Sussex Fire Authority; Thurrock, Southend-on-Sea and Essex for the Essex Fire Authority; Portsmouth, Southampton and Hampshire for the Hampshire Fire Authority; East Riding of Yorkshire, Kingston upon Hull, North East Lincolnshire and North Lincolnshire for the Humberside Fire Authority; Medway and Kent for the Kent Fire Authority; Blackburn with Darwen, Blackpool and Lancashire for the Lancashire Fire Authority; and York and North Yorkshire for the North Yorkshire Fire Authority.

Stratford on Avon District Council

Mr. Maples: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much total Government grant was (a) paid and (b) proposed to be paid to Stratford on Avon District Council in (i) cash and (ii) constant prices in each year between 1997–98 and 2003–04; and what the percentage increase in such grant in each of these years was at constant pricing. [102896]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table shows total formula grant which consists of redistributed business rates, revenue support grant and SSA reduction grant (SSA review) (where appropriate).

Over the period requested there have been many changes in the functions and funding of services to local government. To enable a like-for-like comparison between years, we calculate adjusted grants. The percentage change figures have been calculated on the basis of these like-for-like comparisons.

Until the introduction of Central Support Protection Grant in 1999–2000, there was no need to calculate grant on a like-for-like basis, and for this reason grant comparisons in the years 1997–98 and 1998–99 are not available. There were no changes in funding and function between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 that needed reflecting in adjusted grants for 1998–99 to allow a like-for-like comparison; the actual 1998–99 values have therefore been used in this case.

Year	Formula grant (£ million)	Formula grant at 2003–04 prices (£ million)	Percentage increase in formula grant at 2003–04 prices
1997–98	5.635	6.507	Not available
1998–99	5.167	5.807	Not available
1999–2000	5.516	6.053	6.2
Adjusted 1999–2000	5.516	6.053
2000–01	5.979	6.415	6.0
Adjusted 2000–01	6.016	6.454
2001–02	6.009	6.298	-2.4
Adjusted 2001–02	5.866	6.148
2002–03	6.157	6.295	2.4

Telecommunications

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what further measures he proposes to take to encourage mast sharing by telecommunication operators. [102095]

Mr. McNulty: The Code of Best Practice on Mobile Network Development was published on 11 November 2002. This firmly encourages mast and site sharing where that is the optimum solution in the individual circumstances. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to amend further the planning arrangements for telecommunications development at the present time.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has (a) made to and (b) received from local planning authorities in respect of telecommunication operators' commitment to participate in obligatory pre-rollout and pre-allocation consultation. [102094]

Mr. McNulty: The Government issued 'Planning Policy Guidance Note 8: Telecommunications' in August 2001 which strongly encourages telecommunications operators and local planning authorities to carry out annual discussions about rollout plans for each authority's area. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister also issued the 'Code of Best Practice on Mobile Phone Network Development' in November 2002, which includes more detailed recommendations for managing the relationship between mobile operators and local planning authorities and the process of public consultation. The Code also contained the Mobile Operators' Ten Commitments, which includes the commitments to participate in pre-rollout and pre-application consultation with local authorities and improved consultation with local communities.

The Government receive many representations on matters relating to the telecommunications industry but the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is not aware of any particular representations from local planning authorities on this subject.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what financial support the Government's independent scientific research programme on mobile communications health issues has received from telecommunication operators. [102096]

Mr. McNulty: The independent scientific research programme is costing £7.36 million of which private companies in the telecommunications sector are paying 50 per cent. (£3.68 million). More information about the research programme can be found at the Mobile Telecommunications and Health Research Programme website: www.mthr.org.uk.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what information his Department has gathered regarding the extent to which telecommunication operators have met their commitment to provide staff resources to respond to complaints and inquiries about radio base stations within 10 working days. [102097]

Mr. McNulty: The Mobile Operators Association have commissioned Deloitte and Touchè to carry out an independent review of the implementation of the Operators Ten Commitments. The results of the review will be made available to the public in due course.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to replace telecommunication operators' voluntary code of conduct with statutory regulation; and if he will make a statement. [102098]

Mr. McNulty: There are no plans to replace the mobile phone Operators' Ten Commitments with statutory regulation. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will, however, continue to monitor the implementation of the Commitments and will keep the situation under review in light of experience and any new developments.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many lottery awards there were to organisations in the City of York constituency in each year since 1997; and what the average number of awards per constituency was in each year. [102648]

Mr. Caborn: According to the National Lottery Awards Database, which is based upon the information provided by the Lottery distributers, the total number of Lottery awards made to the City of York, and the average number of awards per constituency made each year since 1997 is set out in the table:

1998	16	13
1999	31	30.5
2000	37	36.8
2001	48	30.2
2002	32	37.1

Regional Cultural Consortiums

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the administrative costs of each regional cultural consortium were in each year since 1999–2000. [102682]

Mr. Caborn: The information required is in the table.

Eastern	388	26,358	31,621	37,884

[2] Expenditure calculated to 31 December 2002

The Consortiums have also received support from staff based within the Government Offices in the regions. The Regional Development Agencies and the various regional cultural agencies have all been encouraged to help with funding and other means of support.

The Consortiums use their resources to promote joint working by regional partners and to implement the Regional Cultural Strategies so that cultural and sporting interests make a significant contribution to economic development, regeneration and social inclusion in each region.

Sporting Events

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make it her policy that adoption of a code of practice on ethical trading on the lines of that developed for the 2002 Manchester Commonwealth Games should be a necessary precondition for Government endorsements of any bid to stage a major sporting event; and if she will make a statement. [101918]

Mr. Caborn: The Government will make a clear assessment of the costs and benefits of hosting the biggest (mega) events such as the Olympic Games and Football's World cup prior to bidding.

It is not policy to adopt a code of practice for ethical trading as a precondition to bid to stage a mega event. However any organisation set up to bid for or stage a mega event will be expected to follow the good practice learned from previous events such as the staging of the Commonwealth Games 2002.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the savings will be made in the Ministry of Defence's budget to fund the new aircraft carriers; and if he will make a statement. [102613]

Mr. Ingram: The new aircraft carriers have been an integral part of the Ministry of Defence's future spending plans since the Strategic Defence Review. There is thus no requirement to find any savings to accommodate this longstanding key capability.

Cluster Bombs

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cluster bombs are stockpiled by the Ministry of Defence, broken down by type. [102358]

Mr. Ingram: Stockholdings of cluster bombs are held at an authorised war reserve stock figure. Details of the precise numbers of weapons could provide a potential adversary with information that could undermine our defence capabilities. I am therefore withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 1 (Defence, Security and International Relations) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which types of cluster munitions the UK armed forces possess. [102359]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom armed forces possess the following types of cluster munitions; the multiple lunch rocket system (MLRS), Shell 155 mm HE L20A1 extended range bomblet shell (ERBS), Shell 155 mm HE M483A1 and the BL755.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use by the RAF of cluster munitions. [102360]

Mr. Ingram: Cluster bombs are one of a range of weapons systems available to the RAF, and are a legal weapon that fulfils a legitimate military role that cannot be performed by other means. Where the RAF has used cluster bombs, it has done so in a manner that is fully consistent with our obligations under international law.

Crisis Management

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what medium-term plans there are to give the EU military staff a planning capability for crisis-management operations; and if he will make a statement. [102677]

Mr. Hoon: European Union member states agreed at Nice in 2000 that the EU Military staff would carry out strategic planning tasks, including for crisis management operations. This covers high-level consideration of options to support political/military decision-making, including particularly planning activities up to the point when the EU approves a military option. As part of the assured access to NATO planning capabilities agreed last year, the EU may call on NATO planning support for these activities.

> "military aspects of strategic advance planning"

More detailed operational planning is not in the terms of reference of the EU Military staff. It was agreed at Nice that NATO's planning bodies will carry out operational planning for EU-led operations with recourse to NATO assets and capabilities. Operational planning for other operations would be carried out in existing European national and multinational headquarters, such as our own Permanent Joint Headquarters.

There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether geographic limits will be set to politico-military action by the EU for crisis-management purposes; and if he will make a statement. [102788]

Mr. Hoon: Currently there are no geographical limits set for crisis management operations which the European Union might conduct as part of the European Security and Defence Policy, although in practice distance would be one of a large number of factors which would determine whether or not an operation could be undertaken. I do not expect this to change.

Cruise Missiles

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what authority the UK Government have given the US Government to load cruise missiles on to B-52 bombers at RAF Gloucestershire; and for what purpose. [102419]

Mr. Hoon: The use by United States Visiting Forces of United Kingdom bases is a matter for joint decision by HM Government and the US Government at the appropriate time. The deployment of the B-52s to RAF Fairford was part of our continuing contingency preparations and did not represent a decision to take military action.

I am withholding the information requested in accordance with Exemption 1 (Defence, security and international relations) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Defence Equipment

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list, by company, the outstanding value of offset obligations imposed and accepted in respect of defence equipment supplied from overseas to the UK. [102077]

Mr. Ingram: I am withholding details of Industrial Participation (offset) obligations by company in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The total value of extant IP obligations is £5.4 billion of which £2.3 billion remains to be completed.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the benefits of privatising the Defence Export Services Organisation; and if he will make a statement. [102579]

Mr. Ingram: The future of the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) was considered as part of the Strategic Defence Review in 1998. At that time a number of options were assessed, including privatisation, but it was concluded that the value of DESO support for defence exports stem from its being an integrated part of MOD and, hence, Government.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on releasing information under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 relating to unpublished papers concerning the Scott Report and Mr. Gerald James. [100713]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 13 March 2003]: It is Ministry of Defence policy to comply with the Freedom of Information Act 2000 once it enters into force. Requests for personal data will continue to be handled in accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998, as amended by the Freedom of Information Act.

EU Military Capabilities

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on progress with implementing the Headline Goal to give the European Union the means of carrying out the full range of Petersberg missions; and if he will make a statement; [102674]

(2) what measures are planned to overcome the budgetary problems affecting achievement of the Helsinki goals; and if he will make a statement; [102678]

(3) what assessment has been made of shortfalls in the military capabilities of the EU member states; what assessment he has made of the prospects for overcoming them; and if he will make a statement. [102675]

Mr. Hoon: The Helsinki Headline Goal has been broken down into 144 capability targets, of which 104 had been met following the Capabilities Improvement Conference in November 2001. Of the 40 shortfalls about half may be resolved by improved management of existing forces. For the rest, a European Capability Action Plan (ECAP) was launched after the conference, comprising multinational panels tasked with suggesting possible solutions.

Steady progress has been made with implementing ECAP. The panels are in the process of issuing their final reports. Panel suggestions will be taken forward by Member States on a voluntary basis, with steps being taken to establish "Project Groups" to take these solutions forward. Decisions on defence budgets and priorities within them are matters for individual member states.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken to incorporate the fight against international terrorism within the range of European Security and Defence Policy missions; and if he will make a statement. [102672]

Mr. Hoon: The European Security and Defence Policy (ESDP) seeks to enable the European Union to deal with the full range of conflict prevention and crisis management missions defined in the Treaty, the "Petersberg Tasks". These missions (humanitarian and rescue tasks, peacekeeping tasks and tasks of combat forces in crisis management, including peacemaking) already give ESDP considerable scope to assist in the fight against international terrorism. Further work was commissioned, building on the Declaration of the Seville European Council concerning the contribution of the European Union's Common Foreign and Security Policy, including ESDP, in the fight against terrorism. This includes strengthening arrangements for sharing intelligence, and developing common threat evaluations. We are also supporting, in the framework of the Convention on the Future of Europe and elsewhere, proposals to allow a member state to call on the resources, including military, of other EU members, for civil protection tasks, following a terrorist attack.

Iraq

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many extra body bags his Department has ordered as part of contingency planning for any war against Iraq; how many his Department holds in stock; and if he will make a statement. [101920]

Mr. Ingram: The Department undertakes routine purchasing of body bags to maintain stock levels. The most recent order, to replenish stocks and provide for contingency requirements, was for a total of 4,040 bags. Deliveries have commenced.

The Ministry of Defence does not hold a centralised data on the holding of body bags, most of which are held at unit level, with a reserve held by the Defence Storage Distribution Agency and this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received a copy of the pages of the Riegle report published by the US Senate on 25 May 1994, which lists the materials exported to Iraq which could contribute to a biological warfare programme; and if he will seek to establish from the USA what threat these materials provide to troops engaged in warfare with Iraq. [101400]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 March 2003]: The Ministry of Defence is aware of the Riegle report. We remain concerned that Iraq continues with efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction, as set out in the dossier "Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction" published by the Government last September.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received about the amount of (a) bacillus anthracis, (b) clostridium botulinum, (c) histoplasma capsulatum, (d) brucella melitensis and (e) clostridium perfingens which have been exported from the USA to Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [101401]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 March 2003]: We share information with allies and believe we have a good understanding of the potential threat that may derive from the biological materials, knowledge and technology known to be available to Iraq.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the consequences will be for troops operating in the Iraq area of the Iraq Atomic Energy Commission's possession of (a) E-coli, (b) genetic materials and (c) human and bacterial DNA. [101402]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 March 2003]: The United Kingdom believes that the possession by Iraq of E-coli, genetic materials or human and bacterial DNA poses less of a hazard than their continuing efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction, as set out in the dossier "Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction" published by the Government last September.

Jaguar Aircraft

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Jaguar combat aircraft (a) have been produced under licence in India and (b) are contracted to be produced under licence in India. [102045]

Mr. Ingram: I am withholding the information requested in accordance with Exemptions lb, 3 and 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information that relate to information whose disclosure would harm the conduct of international relations or affairs, to commercial confidences of a third party, and to information given in confidence.

Mines

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps the Government has taken to ensure that contracts for overseas work awarded by the US to (a) British private military companies and (b) UK-based subsidiaries of US companies do not include the handling, storage and maintenance of anti-personnel mine stockpiles. [101296]

Mr. Ingram: The Landmines Act 1998 prohibits certain conduct, including using or possessing an anti-personnel mine, or participating in the acquisition or transfer of an anti-personnel mine, or assisting, encouraging or inducing such conduct. These offences apply to conduct in the United Kingdom and to conduct by United Kingdom nationals elsewhere. Any indication of illegal activity would be a matter for the law enforcement agencies.

Ministerial Directions

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library ministerial directions issued by his Department since 1997. [98816]

Mr. Hoon: Yes.

Ordnance

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much ordnance was disposed of in the UK in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03; [98298]

(2) what procedure is used by the MOD to dispose of old ordnance; and where it is disposed of. [98297]

Mr. Ingram: Out of shelf life ordnance, or that for which no market can be found, is destroyed by the Ministry of Defence under a contract with QinetiQ. Any base materials (i.e. brass cartridge cases) are sold for recycling.

Disposal by sale of surplus ordnance is the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA). That which is not sold overseas on a Government to Government basis (or gifted to Jordan under the Al Hussein Project) is disposed of within the United Kingdom or overseas by sale to properly licensed concerns through DSA's Marketing Agreement with Royal Ordnance PLC (now BAE systems).

17,265,342 round of small arms ammunition .22 to 30mm, grenades and mortar bombs.

102,156 rounds of large calibre e.g. 105mm to 155mm, 4.5 inch ammunition.

5,470,802 rounds of small arms ammunition .22 to 30mm, grenades and mortar bombs.

2001:

1,228,970 rounds of small arms ammunition.

2002:

686,998 rounds of small arms ammunition.

Minesweepers

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the disposal of minesweeper Pagham. [99782]

Mr. Ingram: The ex-HMS Pagham was formally gifted by the Ministry of Defence to the Stranraer Sea Cadet Unit on 1 May 1999 having been on loan to the unit since 1978. This decision was made in light of an assessment of the likely receipts from the sale of the vessel on the open market and other relevant factors, including the expenditure incurred by the Stranraer unit on maintaining and improving the vessel during the loan period. Other forms of disposal were not considered to be cost effective. The MOD no longer has any responsibility for the vessel.

Skynet 5

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Skynet 5 Project. [101595]

Mr. Ingram: Negotiations leading to deal closure on the Skynet 5 PFI programme are nearing completion. We expect contract award to take place shortly.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicle System

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the operational, technical and political benefits are to the UK of acquiring the planned unmanned aerial vehicle system; and if he will make a statement on the system's inter-operability with that of the Israeli Army. [101213]

Mr. Ingram: The general benefits of the Watchkeeper system, to which I assume my hon. Friend refers, comprising Unmanned Aerial Vehicles, their sensor packages and associated exploitation facilities, were outlined in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence's written statement to the House on 7 February 2003, Official Report, columns 21 -22 WS. We expect to select a single successful Watchkeeper contractor by mid-2004. On interoperability, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Aldershot (Mr. Howarth) on 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 312W. This indicated that our primary focus is on interoperability with NATO allies.

Water and Food Rations (Gulf)

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the water and food rations for armed service personnel operating in the Gulf region. [100861]

Mr. Ingram: Land and Air Forces in Theatre are provided with a fresh cooked breakfast and evening meal each day and the United States supplied MREs (Meals Ready to Eat) for lunch. Meals are cooked by military chefs, from field kitchens. Bottled water is supplied through reliable sources within the region, providing six litres of water per person per day. Personnel undertaking training outside the main operating bases are provided with 24 hour Operational Ration Packs. The Naval Forces have sufficient stock embarked to be self-supporting, with resupply available from Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list Cabinet Committee meetings he has chaired in the last 12 months. [101818]

Mr. Leslie: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Ministerial Statement given on 6 February by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Cabinet Committees. Official Report, column 19WS.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities in Devon have suffered a cut in real terms in central government funding on the basis of the new burdens principle; and if he will define the proposals and initiatives within the principle. [102042]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Finance Settlement 2003–04 provides all authorities in Devon with an above inflation increase in formula grant. Three authorities in fact receive increases above 10 per cent. Where the Government have provided additional funds to those announced in SR2002 for specific new burdens, such as an extra £21.53 million for the End of Life Vehicles Directive, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has adjusted the 2002–03 baseline to enable a like for like comparison. This means that the above inflation grant increases we have guaranteed to all councils are over and above the extra money councils will be receiving for new burdens

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is committed to the new burdens principle which requires Government Departments to fully fund the extra costs on councils of any new initiative for which they are responsible. We looked with local government in the context of the Spending Review 2002 at the new burdens to be imposed on local government, along with the pressures on council expenditure and the scope for efficiency savings. This year's Settlement takes into account the outcome of that work and is reflected in the general grant increases over the next three years of 5.8 per cent., 4.9 per cent., and 6.9 per cent.

In addition, there were a number of new burdens on local authorities which could not be finalised at the time of the Spending Review. The following transfers were added to the Local Government Finance Settlement 2003–04:

Teachers' Pensions	£585.908 million
Concessionary fares	£50 million
End of Life Vehicles Directive	£21.530 million
Enterprise Bill	£4.306 million
Animal Feedstuffs	£2.5 million

Revenue consequence of Supplementary Credit Approvals for detrunked roads £1.444 million.

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much the rate support grant was in (a) Essex County Council and (b) Braintree District Council in each year from 1990 to 2002. [102727]

Mr. Raynsford: The amounts of revenue support grant paid to Essex County Council and to Braintree District Council in each financial year from 1990–91 to 2002–03 are given in the table.

Revenue support grant paid to Essex County Council and Braintree District

[1] Between 1990–91 and 1992–93, all revenue support grant for shire areas was paid direct to the collection funds of district councils amounts for individual authorities were not separately identified.

[2] Responsibility for policing transferred from Essex County Council to Essex Police Authority on 1 April 1995.

[3] The area covered by Essex County Council was reduced on 1 April 1998, when Southend and Thurrock became unitary authorities

Note:

Figures are not necessarily comparable between years due to changes in function and responsibility. The main changes are listed.

Revenue support grant was not the only general grant paid to each authority by central Government during the period shown in the table. Other grants paid include redistributed non-domestic rates.

Residential Care (Funding)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the transfer of funding between social services departments when one department chooses to place residents into residential care in the area of another. [100540]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

In England, a council should provide social services to those who are assessed under section 47of the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 as needing such care services and are considered to be ordinarily resident within that council's area, in accordance with Local Authority Circular 93(7), a copy of which is available in the Library. Once a council has accepted responsibility for a service user, that council should provide and fund the appropriate services whether that service be provided within that council's boundary or outside. There is therefore no requirement to transfer funds between social services departments when one council chooses to place an individual in the area of another council.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Free Fruit Schemes

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what recent communication he has had with the organisers of free fruit schemes for schools; [99740]

(2) what plans he has to increase the take-up of free fruit schemes in British schools; [99739]

(3) how many schools in the United Kingdom are participating in free fruit schemes. [99741]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have made a commitment to introduce a National School Fruit Scheme for four to six-year-olds across England from 2004. The scheme is being introduced through large scale region wide pilots in 2002–03 and 2003–04 with funding from the New Opportunities Fund. The scheme has been introduced in the West Midlands and London and is currently being introduced across the North West.

The scheme is voluntary for schools but our aim is to encourage all eligible schools to take part. The total number of schools currently participating is currently 4,411; around 88 per cent. of those eligible. This means that around 600,000 children are receiving free fruit each school day.

The total number of participating schools will increase as the scheme is expanded to new regions. In regions where the scheme has already been introduced, regional five-a-day co-ordinators and school fruit area co-ordinators are working with regional and local colleagues in health and education to encourage take up of the scheme by all eligible schools. The Department of Health has regular communication with the five a day and school fruit co-ordinators.

There are a number of locally funded projects which provide free fruit to schoolchildren outside the scope of the National School Fruit Scheme in England, although there is no information held centrally on how many schools or children are participating in such schemes.

As health is a devolved matter the Department of Health has responsibility for England only. However, officials have regular contact with their counterparts working on similar schemes in the devolved Administrations.

ENVIRONMENT

Fish (Pain)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent research she has evaluated concerning whether fish feel pain; and if she will make a statement. [100360]

Mr. Morley: The maintenance of high standards of welfare for all animals including fish is a priority for DEFRA. The FAWC Report on the Welfare of Farmed Fish which was published in September 1996 considered the applicability of the term pain to fish. Since this report was published we are aware of further research on this topic.

Projects have been conducted at centres of expertise in the Roslin Institute in Scotland as well as in the University of Edinburgh. We are aware of the recent report by the Fisheries Society of the British Isles on Fish Welfare published in 2002 as well as reports from Canadian sources on this important topic of pain in fish.

While such research suggest fish do not experience pain in the same way as species such as mammals, further detailed research is required before a definitive position can be taken.

Foodstuffs (Labelling/Standards)

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) labelling and (b) standards schemes there are relating to the nature and production of foodstuffs in the UK; and what the requirements are for each. [102440]

Ms Blears [Holding answer 13 March 2003]: I have been asked to reply.

The Government does not collate information on the number of labelling and standards schemes relating to the nature and production of foodstuffs in the United Kingdom. These schemes fall into two general categories: those based on European legislation (such as that on organic food production), and those more commonly referred to as food assurance schemes, which are largely voluntary.

Food assurance schemes generally set out certain production standards in areas such as food safety and hygiene, environmental protection, animal welfare and inspections. An independent review of 18 of the main assurance schemes (including those covered by the British Farm Standard denoted by its "red tractor" logo) was carried out for the Food Standards Agency and published in July last year. It contains detailed descriptions of those schemes. Copies of the review will be placed in the Library.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of two separate GM public debates running concurrently; and if she will make a statement. [100865]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are sponsoring a public debate on GM issues, which was announced last July, that encompasses a range of different activities. As part of that process, the Food Standards Agency announced that it would be conducting a series of events to independently evaluate consumers' views on the acceptability of GM food and how this relates to consumer choice. These activities will be a contribution to the wider public debate.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she is taking to ensure the Scottish Executive is involved in the (a) public debate and (b) approval process for GM crops. [101258]

Mr. Meacher: The Scottish Executive is fully involved in and is contributing to the funding of the Public Debate on GM issues, which is being managed at arms' length from Government by an independent Steering Board. The Steering Board are keeping the Scottish Executive fully informed of their progress.

Decisions to authorise or not the commercial importation or cultivation of any GM crop will be taken, on a case-by-case basis, by European Union (EU) Member States collectively working with the European Commission in the context of EU Directive 2001/18. In preparing the UK's opinion the Government will seek the views of the Devolved Administrations on all applications.

Meat Imports

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cases of specified risk material have been detected in meat imports into the UK from the EU over the past year. [100580]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1 January 2002, there have been 33 cases where specified risk material has been found in imported meat. Each case has been reported to the veterinary authorities of the Member State of origin for appropriate action to be taken. Of these breaches, one consignment came from France, one from the Netherlands, four from the Republic of Ireland, 11 from Germany and 14 from Spain.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she plans to take with regard to meat imports contaminated with specified risk materials. [100581]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

On the instructions of the Food Standards Agency (FSA), the Meat Hygiene Service continues to check at licensed premises every notified consignment of imported carcases beef for any presence of specified risk material (SRM). When SRM is found, the carcases affected are destroyed. The authorities of the exporting country and the European Commission are also informed.

Further to this, the Chairman of the FSA has discussed the issue with the relevant European Commissioner (Commissioner Byrne). The United Kingdom has also instigated discussions at the European Union Standing Committee on the Food Chain and Animal Health and at the EU Beef Management Committee. UK officials have also had profitable discussions at technical level with officials from the Member States concerned.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Baroness Amos had on (a) the peace process in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, (b) the Kimberley diamonds process and (c) conflict prevention measures in the region during her recent visit to Africa; and if he will make a statement. [101800]

Mr. Rammell: During her recent visit to Guinea, Cameroon and Angola, my noble Friend Baroness Amos discussed a range of issues including regional peace and security.

Discussions did not include the DRC or the Kimberley Process certification scheme for rough diamonds. But Baroness Amos is in regular contact with the key African players and other members of the international community on both issues.

Eurobank

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost is to UK public funds of the resignation of the Attorney-General of the Cayman Islands. [103127]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been no cost to UK public funds arising from his departure from office.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the Leader of Government Business of the Cayman Islands Government to discuss the collapse of the Eurobank case; and if he will make a statement. [103128]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My noble Friend Baroness Amos last met the Leader of Government Business during her visit to the Cayman Islands on 16–17 February. She remains in regular touch with him.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he plans in the appointment of law officers to overseas territories as a result of (a) the collapse of the Eurobank case and (b) the subsequent resignation of the Attorney-General to the Cayman Islands. [103129]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. However procedures may be re-examined as part of the constitutional review process now under way in most Overseas Territories following up the commitment made in the 1999 White Paper "Britain and the Overseas Territories: Partnership for Progress and Prosperity". Our position remains that it is fundamentally important to protect the independence and impartiality of law officers and the judiciary in the Overseas Territories.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review security matters relating to overseas territories as a result of the collapse of the Eurobank case in the Cayman Islands; and if he will make a statement. [103130]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

Human Rights

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment his Department has made of the human rights situations in (a) Uzbekistan, (b) Turkmenistan, (c) Kyrgmenistan, (d) Algeria, (e) Jordan, (f) Qatar and (g) Pakistan. [101619]

Mr. Rammell: [holding answer of 10 March 2003]: Human rights are at the heart of foreign policy and as such are integrated into policy-making at all levels. The FCO is therefore continually considering the human rights issues in all countries alongside other political, economic and security issues. However the human rights situations in the countries raised are as follows:

Uzbekistan:

We remain deeply concerned by reports of human right abuses in Uzbekistan. We recognise that the Uzbek Government has made small concessions in addressing the situation, including co-operating with the UN Special Rapporteur for Torture. However, Uzbekistan needs to do much more. We would like to see reform of the criminal justice system, as well as wider recognition of independent human rights groups, religious groups and political parties. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), raised human rights concerns with the Uzbek Ambassador in London on 10 February. We shall continue to press for tangible improvements in Uzbekistan's human rights record. We are also thinking together with the EU how best to handle the human rights situation in Uzbekistan at the next session of the Commission on Human Rights starting in March.

Turkmenistan:

We are greatly concerned at the recent developments in Turkmenistan following the reported assassination attempt on President Niyazov last November. We encouraged the EU to make a statement calling on the Turkmen authorities to comply with Turkmenistan's human rights obligations under international law. The EU is also considering how best to handle the human rights situation at the next session of the Commission on Human Rights.

Through the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) we have sought to establish a fact-finding mission to Turkmenistan to investigate all matters relating to the conduct of the investigations, including detentions, arrests and allegations of torture, as well as the trials, convictions and sentencing procedures. Turkmenistan has however refused to admit any mission of this kind. The OSCE has asked the Turkmen authorities to reconsider. We will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Kyrgyzstan:

We recognise efforts made by the Kyrgyz Government to improve its human rights situation and to bring about political reform. Positive developments include a presidential decree on 8 January 2003 extending a moratorium on the use of the death penalty. We are however still concerned by cases of harassment of independent media and unofficial Muslim groups. We shall continue to help Kyrgyzstan make improvements, in line with its international obligations and commitments.

Algeria:
We regularly raise our concerns about human rights violations in Algeria with the Algerian Government. We continue to urge the Algerian Government to fully comply with all its obligations under international human rights law, including the investigation of human rights violations, and to allow visits by the UN special rapporteurs on the question of torture and on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions. The UK with EU partners has also raised its concerns about a number of cases of human rights abuses with the Algerian authorities. The Algerian Ministry of Foreign Affairs has offered information on some of these cases, but both we and our EU partners will continue to press for full answers.

Jordan:
We welcome the decision by the Jordanian Government to hold general elections in June 2003 (elections were previously postponed from autumn 2002). This decision represents the opportunity for people to exercise their democratic right to vote. We will encourage the Government to hold a free and fair electoral process. We have some concerns about the human rights situation in Jordan including the treatment of religious minorities, honour killings, and freedom of expression. Toujan al-Faisal was a former member of the Jordanian Parliament who was arrested in 2002 in connection with her public criticism of the Government's policies. We welcomed her release following a Royal Pardon in July 2002. We will continue to raise each human rights case as appropriate with the Jordanian Government or in conjunction with EU Partners.

Qatar:
Qatar has a good human rights record for a conservative Islamic society with an autocratic system of government. The social and political system is comparatively tolerant and increasingly open. The Amir has the right basic instincts towards human rights issues but recognises that change which could damage the fabric of his tribal people must be handled carefully and will take time. The Amir is encouraging women to play an active part in all walks of life; he has introduced his first steps towards democratic reform; the press exercises some self censorship; freedom of worship is tolerated provided it is discreet; there are plans to build Qatar's first churches; work continues on codifying sharia and civil law but Qataris are still to some extent associated in the Western mind with their Wahabi cousins in Saudi Arabia. Death sentences have been carried out but are extremely rare. There are, however general issues regarding the treatment of third country nationals and minors working in Qatar.

Pakistan:
The UK Government welcomed President Musharraf's speech of 12 January 2002 in which he condemned all forms of sectarianism and religious hatred and made the case for a moderate and tolerant Islam. We hope the new government will look carefully at human rights violations in Pakistan. The UK and EU are particularly concerned by sectarian and terrorist violence that has resulted in the deaths of a number of Christians across Pakistan, most recently the vicious attack on 25 December 2002.

We have concerns about the abuse of the blasphemy laws and are seriously concerned about the imposition of the death penalty for blasphemy. The UK government opposes the death penalty in all circumstances. Women's rights issues remain a concern. We hope the new government will keep to the pledge of the out-going government to review the Hudood ordinances on Islamic punishments. We are particularly concerned by so-called "honour" crimes against women, forced marriages, domestic violence, kidnap and rate. We believe much can be done to promote women's rights within the existing Islamic legal framework.

Israel

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government concerning (a) the resettlement of Bedouin in the Negev and (b) the provision of services to Bedouin in the Negev; and if he will make a statement. [101584]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Israeli Cabinet will soon vote on a proposal to relocate 70,000 Bedu from the Negev to seven existing settlement areas. I have asked our Embassy in Tel Aviv to raise concerns about the treatment of the Bedu with the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs. We continue to monitor developments closely.

Our Ambassador in Tel Aviv visited the Bedu Regional Council of the Unrecognised Villages on 18 February as part of our Embassy's continuing dialogue with them. In 2002, our Embassy in Tel Aviv completed a successful advocacy-training programme for Bedu leaders and will shortly fund the construction of an 'environmental' medical centre for several unrecognised villages. The Regional Council has warmly welcomed our interest in, and support for, the Bedu's plight.

North Korea

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the nuclear programmes in (a) Iran and (b) North Korea; and if he will make a statement. [101822]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been concern about the nuclear ambitions of both Iran and North Korea for sometime. The IAEA Director-General has recently returned from a fact finding mission to Iran. We await his report to the IAEA Board of Governors.

On North Korea's programme I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Rammell) today UIN 101823.

We continue to monitor closely developments in both countries.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the threat posed to the United Kingdom by North Korea's nuclear programmes. [101823]

Mr. Rammell: We assess that North Korea has the technical capacity to manufacture nuclear weapons, and that the volume of plutonium it has diverted from its nuclear programme would be sufficient to make one or two weapons. We also believe that North Korea could flight test a missile with the potential to reach Europe within weeks of a decision to do so. Once such a missile was flight-tested, it would take several years to deploy the missile operationally.

Assessment of threat is based on both capability and intent. We currently have no evidence of North Korean intent to target the UK.

We deplore North Korea's recent actions, including the expulsion of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) monitors from Yongbyon, and the stated intention to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Sudan

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Sudan on the clearances of villages in the oil field area of Southern Sudan. [101586]

Mr. Rammell: We are in regular contact with the Government of Sudan. The US-led Civilian Protection Monitoring Team (CPMT) has investigated alleged attacks against civilians in Western Upper Nile as part of their normal mandate. At the request of Lt-Gen. Sumbeiywo the CPMT has also investigated alleged violations of the Memorandum of Understanding on cessation of hostilities which was signed at Machakos on 15 October 2002 and extended on 18 November 2002.

On 4 February the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A) signed an addendum which aims to strengthen the MoU. It contains many new and welcome initiatives, including the establishment of a Verification Monitoring Team to investigate alleged violations of the MoU by the Government of Sudan and the SPLM/A, to build confidence between the parties and make more unlikely the sorts of outbreaks of fighting which we have seen recently in Western Upper Nile. We are ready to contribute personnel and resources to this operation.

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK nationals are employed in the southern oil fields of Sudan. [101587]

Mr. Rammell: We cannot state with certainty how many UK nationals are in Sudan. UK nationals are not obliged to register at the British Embassy in Khartoum. Of those who have registered 26 state that they work in the oil industry in south Sudan.

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had on the progress of peace negotiations in Sudan. [101590]

Mr. Rammell: The UK role in supporting the peace process is performed jointly by the FCO and DFID. The UK Special Representative for Sudan, Alan Goulty, leads the UK observer delegation at the peace talks. We continually carry out intensive consultations at ministerial and official level with the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army in support of the Inter-Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) peace process. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary most recently met the Sudanese Foreign Minister at UNGA in September 2002.

United Nations Security Council

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his definition is of the phrase material breach as used in United Nations Security Council Resolutions. [101991]

Mr. Rammell: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said in the House on 7 November 2002, Official Report, column. 437,

> "material breach is a term of art familiar in international law" and

> "means something significant, some behaviour or pattern of behaviour that is serious".

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government means by the term serious consequences used in the draft resolution on Iraq presented by it, the United States and Spain to the United Nations Security Council on 24th February. [102076]

Mr. Rammell: As the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office my hon. Friend the Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien) stated on 4 March in a written reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Morley and Rothwell (Mr. Challen), Official Report, column 915W, the Council has warned Iraq that it will face serious consequences as a result of its continued violation of its obligations. As the Government have made clear, that means consequences up to and including the use of force.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what applications (a) Mr. Robert Mugabe and (b) other Zimbabweans subject to the EU travel ban have made to visit Europe in the next three months; and if he will make a statement. [101780]

Mr. Rammell: We are not aware of any such applications.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the members of the Commonwealth troika on Zimbabwe; what assessment he has made of Zimbabwe's position in the Commonwealth following these discussions; and if he will make a statement. [101820]

Mr. Rammell: We have a regular dialogue with Presidents Mbeki and Obasanjo and Prime Minister Howard about the situation in Zimbabwe. The political, economic and humanitarian situation has further deteriorated since Zimbabwe's suspension from the Commonwealth Councils on 18 March 2002. Zimbabwe has made no progress towards meeting the principles of good governance as set out in the Commonwealth's Harare declaration. On that basis, we see no justification for lifting its current suspension from the Commonwealth Councils.

HEALTH

Avian Flu

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what implications for human health avian influenza has. [102366]

Ms Blears: Avian influenza viruses very occasionally infect humans. However, this is a very rare event. An outbreak of avian influenza (strain H5N1) in Hong Kong in 1997 resulted in the death of six people. There was no evidence of human to human spread. In Europe there have been several cases of avian flu without any human consequences. The United Kingdom has plans in place to deal with a pandemic situation should the need arise.

Dietary Advice

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the Government's five-a-day programme for schools is sourced from British fruit and vegetables. [102547]

Ms Blears [holding answer 12 March 2003]: Under the National School Fruit Scheme, which is part of the five a day programme, apples, pears, bananas and satsumas are provided free to children aged four to six. Since the beginning of the current school year, approximately 63 per cent., of apples and 73 per cent., of pears have been of United Kingdom origin.

The Department is working with a range of partners to maximise the opportunities for UK growers to supply to the scheme, including expanding the range of produce provided to include other types of fruit and vegetables.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to encourage low income groups to increase their consumption of fresh fruit and vegetables. [97324]

Ms Blears: The Government's Five-a-day programme, a NHS Plan commitment, aims to increase access to, and availability and consumption of, fruit and vegetables particularly in low-income groups. Following successful piloting by the Department of Health, the New Opportunities Fund is providing £10 million over the next two years to support 66 local community initiatives led by primary care trusts (PCTs) based in the most deprived areas of England. Evaluation of the initial Department of Health Five-a-day community pilots showed that those who ate less than five a day at baseline increased their intakes by one portion over the course of the study.

The Five-a-day communications programme will provide clear and consistent messages about Five-a-day, including the benefits of eating at least five portions of a variety of fruit and vegetables each day and portion sizes. Work is also in progress with different organisations from across industry, including retailers, producers and caterers, as well as across government and with other agencies, to improve people's access to fruit and vegetables.

Fully operational by 2004, the National School Fruit Scheme will entitle every child aged four to six in infant schools to a free piece of fruit each school day, as part of a national strategy to improve the diet of children. In addition, local initiatives to increase fruit and vegetable consumption in low-income groups may be found through health action zones, sure start, healthy living centres and other PCTs.

Oldchurch Hospital

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been received about Oldchurch Hospital in the London Borough of Havering in each of the last 10 years. [101981]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not routinely collect statistics on the number of complaints received about hospitals. We do receive letters from hon. Members and from the public in respect of complaints about the National Health Service. However, NHS complaints are best dealt with at local level through the NHS complaints procedure. Therefore, letters received by the Department are transferred to the relevant NHS trust where appropriate.

In the last four years Ministers have received directly the following numbers of letters of complaint about Oldchurch Hospital.

Year	Number of Letters
2001	65
2002	23

Information on previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on accident and emergency services at Oldchurch Hospital in the London Borough of Havering. [101984]

Mr. Hutton: Improving patients' experience of emergency care is essential. In light of this, "Reforming Emergency Care" was launched in October 2001, supported by £118 million investment. It sets a long-term programme of reform supported by extra investment and new capacity to address one of the public's key concerns about the national health service—waiting in accident and emergency (A&E).

The NHS Plan set the target to reduce by 2004, the maximum time any patient spends in A&E from arrival, transfer or discharge to four hours. Barking and Havering Hospital NHS Trust is continuing to work toward achieving this target.

Joint Working

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to combine the skills of health visitors and social workers. [102109]

Jacqui Smith: The Department is investing funds from the new human resources development strategy specific grant to support pilot sites to encourage and facilitate joint working across traditional professional roles. We are working in partnership with employers, across service boundaries, to develop new types of workers at different levels of expertise.

Our aim is to consider how social care provision can be improved through new ways of delivering services that make the best use of staff skills and have the needs of the service user as their focus.

Chorley Hospital

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budget provision has been made for the employment of agency (a) doctors, (b) nurses and (c) other staff at Chorley Hospital for the next financial year. [101816]

Jacqui Smith: There is no specific budget set aside for agency staff at the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many agency staff have been employed at Chorley Hospital (a) as doctors, (b) as nurses and (c) in other capacities in each of the last three years. [101413]

Jacqui Smith: The information available is shown in the tables.

1 March 2001 to 28 February 2002	149

Lancashire Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust

In all three categories, and particularly medical staff, the increase of the number of posts is due to major expansion of services since 2001.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mental health beds are available at Chorley hospital; and how many were available in each of the last 30 years. [102545]

Jacqui Smith: Information on bed numbers is collected at national health service trust level and not by individual hospital site.

From 1996–97 bed information for each NHS trust is available from the Department of Health website http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/

Alcohol-related Illness

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent international studies his Department has conducted into the effects of alcohol-related illnesses and deaths on countries' economies. [101068]

Ms Blears: The Department of Health has conducted no recent international studies on the effects of alcohol-related illnesses and deaths on countries' economies. However, the Cabinet Office strategy unit have looked at the strategies in a number of different countries as part of their work on developing the national alcohol harm reduction strategy.

Audiology

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent to date on audiology modernisation (a) in phase I and (b) in phase II; how much is allocated for completion of the national programme; and how much of the total will (i) be offset by PCT expenditure and (ii) be raised by public/private partnership arrangements. [98675]

Jacqui Smith: The Government invested £10.75 million on the first wave of the modernising hearing aid services project and a further £20 million on the second wave. A further £94 million has been allocated to ensure that a modernised service is rolled out to all national health service hearing aid services in England by April 2005. Primary care trusts are expected to contribute 25 per cent. of any additional revenue costs that are incurred through modernisation.

Involving private hearing aid dispensers in providing NHS digital hearing aids has been tested out in two areas of the country. The trial has been very successful. On this basis, the plans for national roll-out of digital hearing aids will include developing public/private partnerships to boost NHS capacity, and to improve access for patients by providing a service "on the High Street" rather than in the hospital.

Bed Blocking

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to tackle bed blocking in York and North Yorkshire. [95202]

Jacqui Smith: The Department of Health has been proactive in a number of areas to help improve the problems arising from delays in patients being discharged from hospitals in York and North Yorkshire.

In 2002–03 funding of £2.3 million has been available to local authorities in North Yorkshire, through the Building Care Capacity Grant to reduce delay in discharging people from hospital.

The change agent team has also been engaged to assist the City of York, York Health Services NHS Trust, and the Selby &York Primary Care Trust to review and devise a more strategic approach to ensuring effective patient care, assessment and placement.

Funding has also been made available to the York and North Yorkshire Councils under the Innovations Fund to help with the assessment processes and intermediate care.

The Community Care (Delayed Discharges) Bill will also help tackle the problem by making councils responsible for meeting the costs to the national health service of delayed discharges where the councils' interventions could prevent the delay.

Care Homes

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the London Borough of Havering regarding funding for care homes; and what his response has been. [101977]

Jacqui Smith: I am not aware of any recent representations from the London Borough of Havering regarding funding for care homes.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 25 February 2003, Official Report, column 514W, to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham, on the Care Standards Act 2000, if he will place copies of the consultation in the Library. [101799]

Jacqui Smith: A copy of the analysis of the responses to the consultation document on amended standards for care homes for older people and adults (18–65) has been placed in the Library.

Children's Servies

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent of parental responsibility to register children with (a) local GPs and (b) other health professionals. [98342]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 February 2003]: At present patients register with a general practitioner to receive general medical services or with a personal medical services (PMS) pilot provider to receive PMS. In either case the service is provided by a GP or by another health care professional as appropriate. Patients do not, however, register separately with such other health care professionals.

A registration application may be made on behalf of a child by either parent, or in the absence of both parents, the guardian or other adult person who has the care of the child. Registration is not compulsory but the Government encourage everyone to do so for the benefit of the child, the family and the wider community.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of sustainable funding for children's hospices. [102544]

Ms Blears: The funding of hospices is a matter for local discussion and agreement and must be based on local health needs assessment. It is therefore important that hospices engage as much as possible with the health service. The package of care provided should be discussed with the local primary care trust, which is responsible for deciding which health services the local population requires, and ensuring the provision of these services.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account the Children's National Services Framework is taking of multi-disciplinary, multi-agency working. [102103]

Jacqui Smith: Developing work from the external working groups working on the national service framework for children, young people and maternity services has emphasised the need for multi-disciplinary multi-agency working. This is likely to be reflected in the final document.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children under six have been removed from (a) GP lists and (b) primary care trusts in each year since 1998; and what the reasons were for the removal; [99182]

(2) how many children under six are receiving only immediate and necessary treatment from GPs or primary care trusts. [99181]

Mr. Hutton: A patient may register with a general practitioner to receive general medical services (CMS) or with a personal medical services (PMS) pilot provider to receive PMS. Patients do not register with a primary care trust (PCT) to receive National Health Service treatment unless that PCT is itself a PMS pilot provider.

Registration is not compulsory but the Government encourages everyone to do so for their own benefit and for that of the wider community. No data are, however, held on the number of people who are not registered with a GP or PMS pilot provider. It is not necessary to register with a GP to receive emergency or immediately necessary treatment and GPs are required to provide this to anyone who needs it at the time they need it.

Although the Department collects information on the number of patients removed from lists, data are not collected or held on the ages of the patients concerned nor on the reasons for their removal, other than whether there was an act or threat of violence.

Correspondence

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Warrington, North concerning Mrs. Gwatkin of Warrington dated 29 October 2002. [96405]

Ms Blears [holding answer 7 February 2003]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 26 February.

Disabled Children

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the External Working Group on disabled children with special reference to children with palliative care needs; [102542]

(2) if he will make a statement on the task group to review the needs of children with severe disabilities and complex life-limiting or terminal conditions. [102543]

Jacqui Smith: The external working group developing national service framework (NSF) standards for the ill child, which includes those with long term conditions, and the external working group on disabled children's services, are by joint working arrangements considering the particular needs of children with complex life-limiting conditions and those who require palliative care.

Themes that are emerging so far, and likely to be covered, include the need for greater flexibility in service delivery and for multidisciplinary and multi-agency partnership working.

The "Children's NSF—Emerging Findings" document, to be issued shortly, will give an overview of the areas that are likely to be included in the final NSF.

Drugs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many registered drug addicts there were in the (a) Leeds, West constituency and (b) the city of Leeds in each year since 1995; and if he will make a statement. [96969]

(2) how many registered drug addicts there are in the (a) Leeds, West constituency and (b) the city of Leeds; how many registered drug addicts in the (i) Leeds, West constituency and (ii) the city of Leeds are receiving (A) rehabilitation and (B) other forms of drug treatment; and if he will make a statement. [96970]

Jacqui Smith: The Information is not available in the form requested.

Following the closure of the Home Office Addicts Index in 1997, the regional drug misuse databases (RDMDs) were the main source of information on people presenting to drug treatment services with a drug problem.

A one off exercise was carried out to estimate the number of drug users in England in contact with drug treatment agencies in 2000–01. Around 2,105 individuals were reported to be in contact with drug treatment agencies in Leeds health authority in 2000–01.

Information on the numbers of users reported as presenting to drug treatment services for treatment in the Leeds HA is given in the table.

Number of users reported as presenting for treatment for drug misuse in Leeds health authority during the six months periods ending 30 September 1996 to 31 March 2001

Six month period ending	Number
September 1996	664
March 1997	653
September 1997	498
March 1998	536
September 1998	927
March 1999	895

The number of drug misusers in Leeds HA receiving rehabilitation and other forms of treatment in 2000–01 is shown in the table. In addition, drugs misusers usually resident in Leeds may be attending rehabilitation centres (or other forms of treatment) outside the area.

Number of drug misusers in treatment in Leeds HA by type of agency, 2000–01

Agency Type	Number
Community: Specialist services	1,713
Community : General Practitioners	289
Structured Day programmes	219
Resident rehabilitation	19
Others	85
Total	2,105

Notes:

1. In the case of residential rehabilitation, places are often purchased at a residential centre that may be outside the drug misusers area of residence. In practice some local authority social services departments agree to fund long distance placements with the agreement of the drug misuser so he/she can be removed from the area where they are involved in drug using. This means that in theory drug misusers resident in Leeds may be receiving treatment in rehabilitation centres elsewhere in England.

2. Following NHS reorganisation in 2002, Leeds health authority became part of West Yorkshire Strategic health authority.

3. Data from the Leeds Drug Action Team shows investment and attendance as 201 additional structured day programmes and 19 placements in residential rehabilitation.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission research into opioid substitution therapy. [101578]

Ms Blears: The National Treatment Agency for Substance Misuse (NTA) is aware that there is well-developed research evidence into the use of opioid substitution therapy— particularly into the effectiveness of oral methadone maintenance treatment. An important part of the NTA role is to support high quality evidence based practice. It is recognised that some findings from the evidence base are not fully implemented and the NTA has built a variety of mechanisms to support the implementation of key research findings into to practice, including briefings, training, commissioning guidance and increasingly performance management systems. The NTA is also working with the Department of Health to develop dissemination of the findings of its current drug treatment research programme. The NTA has recently published a briefing on the advice of its expert group on prescribing, which includes a brief review of the evidence base for opioid treatment.

Copies have been placed in the Library.

The NTA will commission new research in line with the outcome of its current priority setting exercise that is awaiting approval by the NTA Board in March. Research bodies will be invited to submit tenders in line with these priorities.

Food Supplements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he is making to the European Food Standards Agency about ingredients formerly used in foods in the UK but not included in the annexes of the Food Supplement Directive as available for use in the manufacture of food supplements. [102617]

Ms Blears: Lists of permitted vitamins and minerals and their sources in the Annexes to the Food Supplements Directive remain open pending safety assessments of additional substances by the European Union Scientific Committee on Food (SCF) or its successor in the European Food Safety Authority. The Food Standards Agency has written to the European Commission with the aim of facilitating a meeting between United Kingdom stakeholders and representatives of the SCF to discuss the technical content of such dossiers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will propose an amendment to the EU Food Supplements Directive to permit the sale in the UK of products not listed in the Directive but recognised by the competent UK authorities as safe and which are already on the market in the UK; [102619]

(2) what (a) representations he has received from and (b) discussions he has held with the Food Standards Agency about the EU Food Directive; and if he will incorporate the Agency's views in proposals he makes for the revision of the Directive. [102618]

Ms Blears: The Government have no plans to seek an amendment to the European Union Food Supplements Directive. They have already secured provisions which enable member states to allow the continued sale of products which do not comply with the compositional requirements up to 31 December 2009, provided certain criteria are met.

Foundation Trusts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the legal status of foundation trusts. [102176]

Mr. Hutton: Our proposals for national health service foundation trusts are set out in "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts". Subject to parliamentary approval NHS foundation trusts will be established under provisions to be included in the Health & Social Care (Community Health & Standards) Bill, which was published on 13 March.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will happen to a foundation hospital if it fails to meet its liabilities. [102179]

Mr. Hutton: The Independent Regulator would be able to intervene at national health service foundation trusts if it fails to meet its liabilities. The policy is explained in paragraphs 3.34 to 3.38 of "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts". The provisions that apply if an NHS foundation trust fails to meet its liabilities are set out in the Health & Social Care (Community Health & Standards) Bill.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to allow primary care trusts to become foundation institutions; [102177]

(2) what plans he has to expand the provision of foundation status beyond the acute healthcare sector. [102174]

Mr. Hutton: The policy for applications for national health service foundation trust status is set out in 7.3 of "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts".

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how non-executive directors will be appointed to foundation hospital boards. [102181]

Mr. Hutton: Non-executive directors will be elected by members of the Board of Governors of the national health service foundation trust. Details of the policy are set out in paragraph 2.33 and 2.34 of "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts".

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether trusts applying for foundation status will be obliged to have consulted other acute trusts in their local area before being granted foundation status. [102209]

Mr. Hutton: The principles for local consultation by National Health Service foundation trust second stage applicants is set out in paragraph 7.11 of "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts".

Illegal Meat Imports

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he has with the Home Office, Customs and Excise and DEFRA (a) to prevent and (b) to detect illegally imported meat entering the UK. [102163]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency works closely with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on issues concerning the illegal import of meat and is assisting these departments as part of a cross-government action plan to improve enforcement and control of illegal imports. The FSA does not have arrangements currently with the Home Office in this area of work.

International Nurses Advice Line

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 4 March 2003, ref 99682, on the international nurses advice line, if he will break down the calls by the type of caller's query or problem; in how many cases caller's information has been passed to his Department at the caller's request; where callers heard about the advice line; how many repeat callers there were to the line; what the outcome was of problem resolution; and whether calls are recorded. [102562]

Mr. Hutton: The types of queries and problems made by callers to the international nurses advice line are not recorded. Issues that cannot be resolved by the call operators are directed to the Department of Health. To date 15 cases have been forwarded to the Department of Health for further assistance and were dealt with either by direct contact with the caller or by putting the caller in contact with the appropriate nursing association.

Callers, when asked by operators, had heard of the advice line through various media and these included leaflets, posters and press articles, and through word of mouth.

Data indicate that there have been three repeat callers to the advice line since its operation. The calls are not recorded but are monitored.

Inventures

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the former Runwell Hospital site in Wickford, Essex has been included in the bulk sale of properties in the Inventures disposal; what (a) price and (b) terms will be secured by its sale; whether it will be sold with planning permission; and how much has been spent on the (i) maintenance and (ii) refurbishment of the site in the last three years. [102152]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 10 March 2003]: This hospital has been included in the portfolios of properties that will form the basis of the proposed real estate partnership with the private sector. Miller/Bank of Scotland have been chosen as preferred partner.

The price and other terms of the sale are commercially confidential. A planning application for alternative uses has been submitted which Miller/Bank of Scotland will pursue.

The hospital is not expected to close until 2006–7. In the past three years £1.5 million has been spent upgrading wards to meet fire regulations. A further £1.4 million has been invested in securing a safe and appropriate environment for staff and patients until the site is no longer needed for National Health Service use.

Local Government Grant Formulae

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 5 February 2003, Official Report, column 314W, on local government grant formulae, what response he has made to the concerns raised by the Association of London Government in its report "The 2003–04 Local Government Finance Settlement" about the children's formula used in the local government grant formula. [101290]

Jacqui Smith: I wrote to Sir Robin Wales on 24 February responding to the points raised by the Association of London Government on the 2003–04 Local Government Finance Settlement.

The current formulae were reviewed openly with local government and there was a public consultation last summer.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of letter E.814/00–01, referred to in paragraph 21 of the report by the Health Service Ombudsman on NHS funding for long term care. [99383]

Jacqui Smith: A copy of the letter E.814/00–01 referred to in paragraph 21 of the Health Service Ombudsman's report on National Health Service funding for long term care has been placed in the Library.

Looked-after Children

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on looked after children attending (a) private and (b) public boarding schools; and if he will make a statement. [99379]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Skills on 12 March 2003, Official Report, col. 297W.

NHS Managers

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many managers recruited from the private sector since 1998 have left the NHS; and if he will make a statement; [101885]

(2) how many private sector managers have been recruited since 1998 (a) to run central NHS facilities and (b) to work in primary care trusts; and if he will make a statement. [101884]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into the cost of managers to the NHS. [102520]

Mr. Hutton: The Department of Health has not commissioned any research into the cost of managers to the national health service.

Mental Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific financial provision he has made for increase in demand for specialist mental health services following forthcoming military action in the Gulf. [101083]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 6 March 2003]: There are no funds specifically earmarked for the provision of additional specialist mental health services following any military action in the Gulf.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the performance rating system in the mental healthcare sector. [102178]

Mr. Hutton: In July 2002, mental health trusts received an indicative rating on their performance during 2001–02. Later this year, the Commission for Health Improvement will publish full performance ratings for mental health trusts based on their performance during 2002–03.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adolescent mental health patients have been accommodated in adult mental wards in NHS establishments in the last 12 months; and what percentage of the total number treated this represents. [96059]

Jacqui Smith: The following data are taken from the Mental Health Service and Financial Framework Report, 2001–02 outturn, the latest available. There were 64,920 occupied bed days (OBDs) for patients under age 18 on adult psychiatric wards during 2001–02.

This represents 36 per cent. of the total number of hospital OBDs (180,642) for that age group on both child and adolescent and adult wards during that year. 82 per cent. of the OBDs of under 18 year olds on adult wards, that is 53,243 out of 64,920, represented patients in the 16–18 age range; only 18 per cent. 11,677, represented those under age 16.

MRI Scans

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the waiting time is for an MRI scan at (a) Airedale NHS Trust and (b) Burnley Healthcare NHS Trust. [101207]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not available centrally.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on increasing the availability of beta interferon for MS sufferers in Sutton. [101513]

Mr. Hutton: Sutton and Merton Primary Care Trust (PCT) has implemented the risk-sharing scheme for drugs for patients with multiple sclerosis (MS). All eligible patients are being fully funded. These services are being provided to MS patients in Sutton and Cheam at Atkinson Morley Hospital, which is part of St. George's Healthcare National Health Service Trust.

Muscular Dystrophy

Mr Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on his plans to increase the funding spent on research into (a) the treatment and (b) the causes of muscular dystrophy; and if he will make a statement; [100968]

(2) what estimate he has made of the amount of Government funding in 2002–03 for research into (a) the treatment and (b) the causes of muscular dystrophy; and if he will make a statement. [100966]

Jacqui Smith: The main agency through which the Government supports medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology. In 2001–02, the MRC spent an estimated 2 million on muscular dystrophy research. This was an increase on the estimated £1.1 million spent in 2000–01. Figures for 2002–03 are not yet available.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effect on NHS funding of a growing list of NICE approved treatments. [101577]

Ms Blears: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford West and Abingdon (Dr. Evan Harris) on 12 February 2003, Official Report, column 824W. The cost of implementing appraisal guidance issued by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has been taken into account in the funding provided to the national health service.

Neurology

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions he is taking to reduce waiting lists for neurologists; and if he will make a statement. [100106]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are reducing maximum waiting times. As part of the NHS Plan, the maximum waiting time for a first outpatient appointment will fall each year from over six months, down to five, four and finally three months by 2005. The Government's eventual objective is to reduce the maximum wait for any stage of treatment to three months. Provided that the Government can recruit the extra staff, and the National Health Service makes the necessary reforms, the Government hopes to achieve this objective by the end of 2008.

Manpower has been recognised as key to the successful delivery of the NHS Plan and the national service frameworks (NSF). The long term conditions care group workforce team has been set up to support workforce development in the fields of diabetes, renal and long-term conditions. Its aim is to help deliver a multidisciplinary and integrated health and social care workforce to support service improvement.

With regard to neurology, the care group makes recommendations on workforce numbers across the specialty including doctors and nurses. Recommendations are also made on changes in service delivery models to facilitate the best use of all staff.

Between September 1997 and March 2002, consultant numbers in neurology increased by 34 per cent.. During the same period, consultant numbers in neurosurgery increased by 21 per cent..

We are developing a national service framework for long-term conditions, which will have a particular focus on neurological conditions. It is scheduled for publication in 2004, and implementation from 2005. The NSF will help to drive up standards and improve the quality of, and access to, care for people with neurological conditions.

NHS Funding

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS bodies have received direct funding from the Regional Office; and how much was paid to each NHS body, broken down by Directorate of Health and Social Care, in each of the last three years. [100711]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 5 March 2003]: Disclosure of these amounts can be analysed, along with other sources of income, in the income note of a national health service body's accounts. NHS accounts are published locally and are available from the individual NHS body.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the annual performance rating system for NHS trusts (a) is independent from the Government and (b) takes into account hospital specialisation; and if he will make a statement. [102175]

Mr. Hutton: The Commission for Health Improvement is the independent regulator of national health service performance and is responsible for developing indicators and publishing NHS performance ratings. Ministers continue to select key targets and the priority areas to be covered. In July 2002, specialist NHS trusts received their first performance rating based on performance during 2001–02.

Nursing and Midwifery Council

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new requirements for entry to the Nursing and Midwifery Council Register have been agreed for implementation by 2005 by health visitor members of the NMC since April 2002. [102102]

Mr. Hutton: It is for the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) to propose, and the Privy Council to determine the requirements for entry to the register. The NMC, which comprises equal numbers of nurse, midwife and health visitor members, is considering in consultation with the professions the parts of the future register and standards required for entry to those.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of respondents to the public consultation on the Nursing and Midwifery Council Register supported direct entry to the proposed third part of the register. [102099]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) is an independent statutory body and is required to consult on its proposals for a new register. The NMC has not published a response to its consultation.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the proposed third part of the Nursing and Midwifery Council Register will allow direct entry for community public healthcare professionals. [102100]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council has powers to regulate only the professions of nursing and midwifery.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Nursing and Midwifery Council supports the proposals to expand the third part of the NMC register to include nurses and midwives who work as specialists in community and public health. [102101]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council is the body responsible for making proposals in respect of the parts of the register.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will approve a non direct entry proposal for the proposed third part of the NMC Register only as an interim measure until the children's workforce planning group has reported its findings. [102104]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) has powers to regulate only the professions of nursing and midwifery. A proposal for a non-direct entry third part of the NMC register will be considered and if appropriate, approved by the Privy Council.

The NMC will want to consider the implications for the register of any report by the children's workforce planning group when that report is available.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will amend the Nursing and Midwifery Order 2001 to allow a three part register that is equitable across the three groups regulated by the Nursing and Midwifery Council. [102105]

Mr. Hutton: No. The Order allows, if the Council propose it and the Privy Council agree it, for there to be a three part register that is equitable across the three groups regulated by the Nursing and Midwifery Council, each part with a designated title indicative of different qualifications and different kinds of educational training.

Obesity

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a National Standards Framework to tackle obesity. [100546]

Ms Blears: The Government are not considering a national standards framework (NSF) for obesity. However, action to address obesity is being taken forward through the NSF for coronary heart disease and older people. Action to reduce obesity will be necessary to meet Standard 1 of the NSF for diabetes.

Following publication of the Government's strategy for sustainable farming and food, the Department of Health is leading on developing a food and health action plan. This will pull together all of the issues on diet and nutrition, which is of direct relevance to the prevention and management of obesity, and promote action at national, regional and local levels.

Current guidance available to contribute to tackling obesity includes guidance issued by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence on the anti-obesity drugs orlistat and sibutramine, and surgery and a national quality assurance framework for exercise referral systems to promote physical activity. The evidenced-based Five-a-day handbook will support staff in primary care trusts and other organisations to establish community-wide initiatives to increase fruit and vegetable consumption, and the Health Development Agency is providing a report setting out the evidence base for the prevention and treatment of overweight people and obesity, and the maintenance of weight loss. Evidence from the local exercise action pilots will also provide guidance for increasing physical activity levels.

Older People (Drug Treatment)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the change from traditional to atypical antipsychotics drugs to treat older people in (a) care homes and (b) hospitals; what assessment he has made of possible over-medication of people using antipsychotic drugs; and if he will make a statement. [99380]

Jacqui Smith: Information about the prescribing of antipsychotic drugs is only available in relation to prescriptions dispensed in the community. It is estimated that, in 2001, just under 40 per cent. of antipsychotics dispensed to older people were atypicals, while in April-September 2002 this proportion is estimated to have increased to just over a half. There are likely to be a number of reasons for the move to atypicals. One is that clinicians believe they are better tolerated by patients than traditional antipsychotices. The Government is aware of concern about the possible overuse of antipsychotic drugs for older people A number of steps should help ensure their appropriate use—in particular, implementation of the medicines management supplement of the older people's national service framework and the requirements in the care homes national minimum standards.

Parliamentary Questions

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham will receive answers to his questions refs (a) 89928, (b) 92551 and (c) 92538. [100502]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave on 26 February 2003, Official Report, column 636W and on 28 February 2003, Official Report, column 779W. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 March 2003, Official Report, column 338–39W.

Patient Choice

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will determine whether a patient in Greater Manchester waiting six months for (a) orthopaedic treatment, (b) ENT treatment or (c) general surgery is eligible to choose an alternative hospital. [99107]

Mr. Hutton: Approval has recently been given by the Department of Health to the establishment of a national health service based "CHOICE" pilot scheme. In Greater Manchester, this is to be based around the Greater Manchester Surgical Centre at Trafford General Hospital. When fully up and running in October 2003, the pilot proposes that any patient registered with a general practitioner in Greater Manchester who has been waiting over six months in the specialties of general surgery, ear, nose and throat and orthopaedics for set of procedures will be eligible to choose an alternative treatment centre.

Practice Lists (Child Removal)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he has taken to prevent GP practices removing children not immunised against MMR from their practice list. [99179]

Mr. Hutton: General practitioners should not remove patients from their lists in these circumstances. The General Medical Council has issued guidance—"Duties of a Doctor— Good Medical Practice", which makes it clear that patients should not be removed because of the financial impact of their care or treatment on the practice.

The Department fully supports that advice. The proposed new general medical services contract which was announced on 21 February is intended not only to provide for a consistently high quality service to patients but also to avoid perverse incentives such as any which might encourage removal of patients from practice lists other than for good reason.

Smoking

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has undertaken into the major health effects of passive smoking in (a) adults, with particular reference to pregnant women and (b) children, with particular reference to babies aged between eight and 12 weeks. [97575]

Ms Blears: The independent Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health concluded in its 1998 Report that:

> Exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is a cause of lung cancer and, in those with long-term exposure, the increased risk is in the order of 20–30 per cent.
> Exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is a cause of ischaemic heart diseases and if current published estimates of magnitude of relative risk are validated, such exposures represents a substantial public hazard.
> Smoking in the presence of infants and children is a cause of serious respiratory illness and asthmatic attacks
> Sudden infant death syndrome, the main cause of post-neonatal death in the first year of life, is associated with exposure to environmental tobacco smoke. The association is judged to be one of cause and effect.
> Middle ear disease in children is linked with parental smoking and this association is likely to be causal.

The independent Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health subsequently re-iterated this view in its 2001 Annual Report. The statement can be found on the following websites:

www.doh.gov.uk/scoth/index.htm

http://www.archive.official-documents.co.uk/document/doh/tobacco/report.htrn

No further recent research has been commissioned by the Department into the health effects of passive smoking.

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned on the effects of passive smoking in the workplace; and if he will make a statement. [98492]

Ms Blears: The independent Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health concluded in its 1998 Report that:

No further recent research has been commissioned by the Department into the health effects of passive smoking.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has carried out into the health implications of passive smoking. [98921]

Ms Blears [holding answer 27 February 2003]: The independent Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health concluded in its 1998 Report that:

> Exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is a cause of lung cancer and, in those with long-term exposure, the increased risk is in the order of 20–30 per cent.

www.doh.gov.uk/scoth/index.htm

http://www.archive.official-documents.co.uk/document/doh/tobacco/report.htm

No further recent research has been commissioned by the Department into the health effects of passive smoking.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on (a) smoking in public places and (b) passive smoking. [98843]

Ms Blears: The White Paper, "Smoking Kills" committed the Government to working in partnership with industry to reduce the problem of exposure to passive smoke through voluntary action rather than legislation. It praised the example of the licensed hospitality industry, which agreed, with Government support, the Public Places Charter. The Charter commits signatories to increasing the provision of facilities for non-smokers, improving ventilation and giving customers better information about the level of smoke-free facilities in a given establishment.

We consider that if we are to ensure protection against passive smoking in public places, we need action nationally and locally both to raise awareness of the risks associated with passive smoking and to increase the prevalence of smoke free environments. The Department of Health will continue to encourage the development of smoke free policies, working with employers and communities.

At a national level the Department of Health has, since 1998, worked with the hospitality industry to reduce the problem of exposure to passive smoking through the development of a Public Places Charter. An independent evaluation of the Charter is being commissioned, and further work will be considered on the basis of the findings.Locally, the Department is funding tobacco control alliances across England to work in communities to raise awareness and to increase the number of smoke-free environments. Findings from these projects will inform future development of the Department's work in this area.

The Department of Health will, in addition to action already under way, develop education and information resources to raise awareness and understanding of the risks associated with passive smoking.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to support legislation against smoking in the workplace. [98922]

Ms Blears [holding answer 27 February 2003]: Although the Government do not support legislation to ban smoking in the workplace, existing health and safety legislation, the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974, places responsibility on employers to protect the health, safety and welfare of their employees.

The Government are giving careful consideration to the Health and Safety Commission's proposals for an Approved Code of Practice on Smoking in the Workplace (ACoP). While consideration of the ACoP continues, other action is being taken to encourage the provision of smoke free areas in public and workplaces.

We consider that if we are to ensure protection against passive smoking in public places and workplaces, we need action nationally and locally both to raise awareness of the risks associated with passive smoking and to increase the prevalence of smoke free environments. The Department will continue to encourage the development of smoke free policies, working with employers and communities.

Locally, the Department is funding tobacco control alliances across England to work in communities to raise awareness and to increase the number of smoke free environments. Findings from these projects will inform future development of the Department's work in this area.

The Department will, in addition to action already under way, develop education and information resources to raise awareness and understanding of the risks associated with passive smoking.

Social Workers

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 26W, on child protection, when the General Social Care Council is planning to report on the review of the current framework for post-qualifying training for social work; what the parameters of the review conducted by the General Social Care Council into post-qualifying training are; how many social workers hold the post-qualifying award; and if he will make a statement on the implementation by local authority social services departments of the action plan to effect planned developments. [100487]

Jacqui Smith: It is the intention that the General Social Care Council's review of the post-qualifying training framework will report their findings and recommendations later in the year. The GSCC intends to consult extensively on the future framework for post-qualifying awards during April and May this year. The scope of the review will include the range and design of qualifications within the framework and the administrative framework to support their delivery. Any statement on how recommendations from the review should be implemented will be made after this.

The number of social workers in England holding the post-qualifying award, recorded by the GSCC is 1,875. However, this award is just one of a number of post-qualifying awards that can be gained after social workers have become professionally qualified in both generic and specialised areas. It these are taken into account, the total number of awards issued comes to over 9,500.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he will take against local authority social services departments that have been found to have recruited social workers who have not had their qualifications validated with the General Social Care Council; and how many times this has happened in the last five years. [100488]

Jacqui Smith: Local authorities, as with any other employer of social care staff, should carry out appropriate checks to ensure that the social workers in their employ are properly qualified for the work they are employed to carry out. In September 2002, the General Social Care Council (GSCC) published codes of practice for social care workers and employers. Code 1 of the employers code requires employers to make sure that only people who have the appropriate knowledge and skills enter the social care work force. The codes are taken into account in the enforcement of National Care Standards.

All courses in social work are approved by the GSCC, which has been in operation since October 2001. The GSCC is also the awarding body for the Diploma in Social Work and will validate the successful completion of the Diploma programme by an individual. The GSCC also offers an advisory service to employers and internationally qualified social workers, verifying whether or not the qualification is a professional qualification in social work in its country of origin.

Prior to this date, the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) was the awarding body for the Diploma in Social Work and offered the same service.

However, there is no obligation to validate qualifications with the GSCC, or was there previously with the CCETSW, and no action is taken against those who do not use this service.

Tobacco Regulatory Authority

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with other member states of the European Union about establishing a tobacco regulatory authority. [99283]

Ms Blears: Ministers have had no formal discussions to date with other Member States of the European Union about establishing a new tobacco regulatory authority. However, European wide legislation to introduce tighter controls on tobacco products is currently entering into force in Member States.

The Government believes that much of the work to further regulate tobacco is being addressed through continuing developments under the Directive on the Manufacture, Presentation and Sale of Tobacco Products. This legislation was transposed into United Kingdom law in December 2002. It lays down maximum yields of tar, nicotine and carbon monoxide for cigarettes; requires new larger and starker health warnings on tobacco products and bans the use of terms such as Now tar7 which suggest one tobacco product is less harmful than another.

Article 11 of this Directive requires the European Commission to evaluate implementation of the Directive. This includes indicating where further review may be necessary in a wide range of tobacco regulatory areas, in the light of developments in scientific and technical knowledge. This could include evaluation of addictive effects of ingredients in tobacco products and methodologies for more realistically assessing the content and emissions of tobacco products. The Commission may also propose amendments to the current Directive. Full details of article 11 are contained in the Department of Health publication "Consultation on regulations implementing EU Directive 2001/37/EC— the Labelling Directive", copies of which are available in the Library.

Unpaid Carers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government is taking to support unpaid carers; what plans he has to bring new funds to (a) help carers and (b) set up better support networks; and if he will make a statement. [100295]

Jacqui Smith: Through the Carers and Disabled Children Act 2000, carers are entitled to an assessment to determine their needs as carers and eligibility for support. They may also receive cash to purchase the services they need.

The Carers Grant gives money to local councils to provide short breaks for carers to enable them to continue in their caring role. The grant has been increased annually since its introduction in 1999 from £20 million to £100 million in 2003–04. The Grant will continue until 2006, during which time it will more than double to £185 million to provide extended care and 130,000 further breaks to carers. Increased flexibility in the use of the Grant will allow councils to better support local carers networks.

In addition the Department of Health makes grants to voluntary organisations to provide information to support carers.

Utting Report

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which recommendations of the Utting Report the Government have implemented in full. [100779]

Jacqui Smith: Of the 20 principal recommendations contained in "People Like US—The Report of the Review of the Safeguards for Children Living Away from Home (Utting, 1997)", 11 were for the Government to address. Of these 11, two were rejected, recommendations six and nine, eight have been implemented in full, recommendations one, five, seven, 11, 13, 16, 18, and 19, and one, recommendation 20, was partially implemented. Recommendation 20 relates to the implementation of the remaining recommendations contained in the 1989 Pigot report. These were considered by the interdepartmental report "Speaking

Up for Justice" and informed the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999, now in the process of implementation.

Waiting Times

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Audit Commission report on the alteration by NHS hospital trusts of figures on waiting times; and which hospitals in the north-west have been accused of altering waiting time lists. [102546]

Mr. Hutton: The Audit Commission report "Waiting List Accuracy" was published on Wednesday 5 March. Three trusts were found to be deliberately misreporting their data, this practice is inexcusable, in all of these cases prompt action was taken to investigate and deal with the issues identified. Only one of these trusts is in the north-west, South Manchester University Hospitals National Health Service Trust.

Working Practices

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his definition is of (a) multidisciplinary working and (b) co-terminosity; and if he will make a statement. [98593]

Mr. Hutton: In a health and social care context, multidisciplinary working refers to a number of trained and skilled professionals using and co-ordinating their particular expertise to ensure that people receive the best possible treatment and care. Co-terminosity means the alignment of organisational boundaries between health and social care agencies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reach a decision on the asylum application of Mr. Hektor Sinani, Ref S1034257/3; and where the papers relating to Mr. Sinani's application are located. [102250]

Beverley Hughes: Hektor Sinani's asylum claim was refused on 17 April 2000, and the subsequent appeal was dismissed on 13 March 2001. Mr. Sinani's papers are at Eaton House to consider further applications on the basis of his marriage and Human Rights grounds. These applications will be resolved within the next two weeks.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to deport failed asylum seekers to Somalia; and if he will make a statement. [103031]

Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2003, Official Report, column 321W, what steps he is taking to monitor the effectiveness of the provisions cited in his answer in helping the UK to meet its obligations under the Biological and Toxic Weapons Convention. [101809]

Mr. Blunkett: Further to my answer of 5 February, statistical information on use of the powers under sections 113 and 114 of the Anti Terrorism Crime and Security Act 2001 (ATCS) is collected regularly. The powers have been used in respect of two juveniles, detained on hoaxing charges and released on bail pending trial.

As a result of investigations in London, four people have been charged under section 2 of the Chemical Weapons Act 1996. In a subsequent investigation five other people have been charged under section 1 (1) of the Criminal Law Act 1967 with conspiracy to produce or develop chemical weapons. The protective security arrangements surrounding the security of pathogens and toxins under part 7 of the ATCS are being taken forward as part of the implementation of the Act.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department expects to pay to Capita for work carried out for his Department (a) in 2003 and (b) 2002. [101137]

Mr. Blunkett: The forecasted payments by the Home Department to Capita for work carried out in 2002 and 2003 are as follows:

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 13 March 2003.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Bolton, South East of 12 September 2002, 29 October 2002, 4 December 2002 and 8 January 2003 regarding the case of Mr. Mohammed Iqbal (HO Ref J243444). [101342]

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 13 March 2003.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will reply to a letter from the hon. Member for Vauxhall dated 21 November 2002 about a constituent, reference number D1066307. [101834]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate wrote to my hon. Friend on 7 March 2003.

Court Escapees

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people found guilty of a criminal offence escaped from court last year; and of these, how many failed to be recaptured. [100483]

Hilary Benn: Information received from the Prisoner Escort and Custody Service shows that 34 persons escaped from courts in England and Wales in 2002, but information held centrally does not identify whether these persons were convicted or whether a recapture took place. As this information will need to be collated I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available. In addition, a further 21 persons escaped but were recaptured within 15 minutes.

Guildford/Birmingham Bombings

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bombs in (a) Guildford on 5 October 1974 and (b) Birmingham on 21 November 1974. [102127]

Mr. Blunkett: The cases remain open. Should any new evidence or information come to the attention of the police service, it will, of course, be investigated fully.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are in place to ensure that all persons employed by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are either UK citizens or have valid work permits. [101650]

Beverley Hughes: All candidates who apply to work for the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) must meet the required eligibility criteria which is set out on each recruitment campaign. For administrative and executive grades candidates must be a British or Commonwealth citizen or a national of a state within the EU with no time limit on their stay in the UK. They should also have normally lived in the UK continuously for the previous three years. For Immigration Service grades candidates must be a UK national with five years residence in the UK.

When a candidate applies for a recruitment campaign their application form is checked to ensure they fulfil the relevant nationality criteria. If they are successful in reaching the interview stage they are then required to produce either a birth certificate or UK, EU or Commonwealth passport. These documents are photocopied and any passport other than a UK or EU document is checked to ensure that the holder has Indefinite Leave to Remain (ILR) in the UK. This means that anyone who is declared successful at interview does not have any restrictions attached to their stay in this country and is allowed to work here.

Prior to offering a start date to any candidate successful on a recruitment scheme enquiries are conducted into suitability for employment. These include security checks, inquiries into health and taking up employment or academic references and personal references. Only when we are content that all inquiries have been completed satisfactorily, will an offer of employment be made.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate, broken down by grade. [102453]

Beverley Hughes: The information is as follows:

Lili Lin

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the case of Lili Lin. [101987]

Beverley Hughes: Ms Lin was due to be removed from the United Kingdom on 6 March 2003. Ms Lin has since submitted a further application to remain in the United Kingdom. She will not be removed while this application is under consideration.

Motorised Scooters

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers are available to (a) the police and (b) local authorities to tackle problems caused by motorised scooters using pavements. [102284]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: I understand that caselaw confirms that riding a motorised scooter on a pavement is an offence under section 72 of the Highways Act 1835 the maximum penalty for which is a fine not exceeding Level 2 on the standard scale. The police will take action as they consider appropriate locally in each case to enforce the law. Where the offender is a child the police can warn him and advise his parents as necessary. Local authorities have no power to deal with the specific problem. They can make byelaws prohibiting the use of motorised scooters in particular areas.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 10 March, ref 96152, if he will reply to the second part of the hon. Member's question. [102827]

Beverley Hughes: I apologise for the delay in responding. At the time your letter was received in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) the file was in transit within the IND estate. As a result your letter could not be immediately linked to the file and responded to.

Smallpox Vaccinations

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the Secretary of State for Health about the availability to the general public of smallpox vaccinations. [101617]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 7 March 2003]: I hold regular discussions with Cabinet colleagues on a wide range of issues. This is an integral part of the routine process of government but it is not Government policy to disclose details of specific conversations. Discussions between Cabinet colleagues fall under Exemption 2 in the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which covers Internal Discussion and Advice.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Burundi

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the (a) timescale and (b) process are for the release of her Department's pledged funds to Burundi; and if she will make a statement. [103112]

Clare Short: At the most recent Donors Roundtable Meeting on Burundi held in Geneva last November 2002 we reconfirmed that although the UK would not become a substantial bilateral donor to Burundi we would play our part in support of others, particularly the multilateral agencies. This includes continuing our existing bilateral assistance (mainly humanitarian assistance, work with the media, HIV/AIDS prevention and peace building). We also agreed to consider an additional contribution of US$1 million to the World Bank Multilateral Debt Trust Fund. We are in the process of releasing these funds to the World bank. Our total support to Burundi in the current financial year will be some £2.2 million.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department is doing to promote peace in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [102744]

Clare Short: I have been closely involved in supporting the peace process in the Democratic Republic of Congo. In addition DFID has provided support to a number of peace-building initiatives in support of the Lusaka and Pretoria agreements. We have committed $25 million to the $330 million World Bank Multi-Country Demobilisation and Reintegration Programme for the Great Lakes region. We are assisting the UN's peacekeeping interventions through support to Radio Okapi, the MONUC linked radio station in the DRC. We have supported community based peace-building projects managed by the Christian Aid and CAFOD in Eastern DRC, and provided funds for the peace-building work of Life and Peace Institute and International Alert. We have also provided some limited technical assistance to the office of the Facilitator in the Inter-Congolese Dialogue.

Empowering Women

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much development aid was paid by her Department to schemes aimed at empowering women in (a) 1998, (b) 2000 and (c) 2002; and if she will list the projects concerned. [102236]

Clare Short: Because women make up 70 per cent. of the world's poor DFID puts women's empowerment at the heart of its work, actively pursuing it in the mainstream of all development activities. It begins with girls' access to basic education and completion of primary schooling; support for civil society organisations that represent women's needs and advocate for women in decision-making roles; and education of the whole community about the rights of women and girls.

DFID expenditure on support including women's empowerment and gender equality as a principal or significant objective is available by financial year:

1998–99	26.4
1999–2000	56.9
2000–01	90.7
2001–02	166.9

A project list cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Global Health Fund

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will list the sources of money allocated to the Global Health Fund; and if she will make a statement; [103107]

(2) what discussions her Department has had with other international donors regarding the shortfall of the $10 billion a year required by the Global Health Fund; and if she will make a statement. [103108]

Clare Short: The primary role of the fund is to provide drugs and commodities for the prevention and treatment of AIDS, TB and Malaria. DFID have pledged $200 million over five years to the fund, $80 million of which has been disbursed. In addition DFID have committed over £1.5 billion since 1997 to support the development of health systems in poorer countries. Strengthening such systems is vital if drugs are to be safely and sustainably supplied to the poor. Wherever possible the Global Fund should be providing support behind strategies that help deliver sustainable improvements in health care. The fund has strong founding principles in this regard, but performance to date in this regard has been mixed. Our future support for the Global Fund will depend on its effectiveness. It is one of several possible instruments designed to improve basic health care in poor countries.

Sources of money allocated to the Global Fund can be found on its website: www.globalfundatm.org/contribute.html

My Department is in frequent contact with other international donors and has repeatedly stressed the need for others to make multi year funding pledges to the Global Fund to fight AIDS, TB and Malaria as DFID has done.

The figure of US $7–10 billion per annum is a UNAIDS estimate of the total additional resources required to tackle HIV/AIDS. As Kofi Annan has made clear it is not a target for the fund.

Overseas Aid

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid the British Government has disbursed (a) in each of the last two years and (b) so far this year to (i) Uganda, (ii) Rwanda and (iii) the Democratic Republic of Congo. [102347]

Clare Short: In each of the last two financial years, the British Government have distributed aid to Uganda, Rwanda and the Democratic Republic of Congo. Total UK expenditure for each country, including the estimates for 2002–03, is as follows. As the hon. Gentleman will know, long-term expenditure in DRC is confined to humanitarian and conflict resolution interventions. Development is impossible without the establishment of peace and legitimate government. We are pressing President Kabila to agree to the installation of the Transitional government so that debt relief can be agreed and reconstruction can begin.

Country/year	£ million

LORD CHANCELLOR

Correspondence

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the hon. Member for Richmond Park will receive a reply to her letter of 14 January 2002 regarding the Pedler Family Judicial Trustee case. [99930]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Lord Chancellor replied personally to Dr. Tonge's letter of 14 January 2002 on 28 April 2002.

Abducted Children

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps have recently been taken by her Department to provide and improve statistics of cases of child abduction. [102237]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 7 January 2003, Official Report, column 66W. I would only add that the statistical information collected by the Child Abduction Unit is submitted to the Permanent Bureau of the Hague Conference annually for publication on their website.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what steps are taken by her Department to help parents with abducted children to gain access to their children held abroad; [102239]

(2) what assessment she has made of her Department's compliance with the recommendations established in Article 21 of the Hague Convention when advising parents who have had their children abducted to make an application for access; how those applications are handled; and what support is provided by her Department to ensure that the applications are successful. [102240]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Article 21 of the 1980 Hague Child Abduction Convention allows applications via the designated Central Authorities for arrangements to secure effective exercise of rights of access. The primary remedy, however, is the return of the child, and applications under Article 21 will generally be deferred until the return application is concluded. I am satisfied that the Child Abduction Unit discharges its functions on behalf of the Lord Chancellor as Central Authority for England, Wales and Northern Ireland in compliance with the requirements of the 1980 Hague Convention. The Child Abduction Unit ensures that all parents who have not obtained the child's return under the return provisions of the Convention, are advised of the possibility of seeking access through Article 21 of the Convention. The Unit will transmit any application made, whether for return of the child or for access rights, to its counterpart in the other country, monitor the case, liaise with all interested parties and assist as necessary. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will also provide appropriate consular assistance. The decision on any application is a matter for the court to which the application is addressed.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made in attaining performance targets for the collection of outstanding fines imposed by magistrates courts. [99871]

Yvette Cooper: Magistrates Courts Committees (MCCs) have responsibility for the collection of a range of debts imposed through the courts, including not only fines but also fees, compensation, confiscation orders, legal aid contributions and some maintenance orders.

The table sets out the latest figures for the payment rate for individual MCCs. Fine enforcement performance is too low and the variations are too wide and unacceptable ranging from over 80 per cent. to under 40 per cent.

MCCs set their own targets for improvement when they bid for a share of £9 million extra investment (netting off) for the financial year 2002–03. The aggregate of the local targets was an increase in fines collected of 7 per cent. The Government set out a target national performance level of 68 per cent. in the payment rate by end of March 2003.

The payment rate currently includes confiscation orders as well as fines, so individual areas can see their figures distorted by high confiscation orders imposed in one quarter and collected at a later date.

Some MCCs have demonstrated significant improvements in performance: Avon and Somerset (from 54 per cent. to 73 per cent.), Gloucestershire (from 42 per cent. to 73 per cent.) and South Wales (from 39 per cent. to 50 per cent.). Others have seen performance fall, such as GLMCA, which has deteriorated from 46 per cent. to 38 per cent.

The total amount of money collected in the 12 months to December 2002 has increased by £2.3 million (or 1 per cent.) compared to previous year. However the total new amount owed has increased by 6.9 per cent. The current rolling year payment rate is 56 per cent. compared to 59 per cent. a year ago. Excluding the Greater London Magistrates' Courts' Authority the payment rate is 62 per cent.

Fine enforcement performance is too low and the current variations in performance are unacceptable. That is why the Government have introduced a major program of work to tackle fine enforcement.

Funded pilots of different approaches to fine enforcement showing significant increases in enforcement.

Poorly performing MCCs must draw up action plans incorporating findings of the research in order to qualify for their share of next years funding.

Extra investment in fine enforcement of £9 million in current year rising to £18 million next year.

Introducing a unified courts administration with stronger management systems for tackling poor performance as part of the Courts Bill.

Vehicle clamping of defaulters, discount for prompt payment and increases if the offender fails to pay on time, registering the debt with the registry of judgments to prevent defaulters from getting credit as part of the Courts Bill.

Increasing support and advice for those who cannot pay as well as developing alternative sentence options in the community.

Ministerial Travel

Norman Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been spent, in each year from 1 May 1997 to date, on the Lord Chancellor's personal travel arrangements on official business, broken down by (a) provision and running costs of vehicular transport, (b) first class travel by rail, (c) standard class travel by rail, (d) first class travel by air, (e) club or equivalent class travel by air and (f) economy class travel by air. [96418]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information available without disproportional cost is as follows: the table sets out departmental expenditure on all ministerial car use since 1 May 1997 (the number of Ministers in the Department increased from two to three during 1999–2000; and from three to four during 2000–01). For other travel, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Overseas Trips

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will list each of the overseas trips made by herself and other members of her ministerial team in 2002; and what the (a) purpose and (b) cost of each trip was. [101843]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

PRIME MINISTER

Gifts

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list gifts received by Ministers in the last 12 months. [103556]

The Prime Minister: I have today published a list of gifts received by Ministers. The list provides details of gifts received since June 2001 valued at more than £140. Copies of the list have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

GM Technology

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions since June 2001 when he has received representations from the US administration in favour of GM technology; and when he last discussed the issue with President Bush. [102817]

The Prime Minister: I have received no representations from the US administration in favour of GM technology. However, I have regular discussions with President Bush on a wide range of issues, including agriculture. The Government and representatives of the US administration are in regular contact and have exchanged views on GM issues.

Iraq

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the legal basis for military intervention against Iraq. [102902]

The Prime Minister: There is a longstanding convention, followed by successive Governments and reflected in the ministerial code, that legal advice to the Government remains confidential. This enables Government to obtain frank and full legal advice in confidence, as everyone else can.

We always act in accordance with international law. At the appropriate time the Government would of course explain the legal basis for any military action that may be necessary.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he has consulted previous prime ministers to secure their consent to commit British forces to battle in Iraq. [103051]

The Prime Minister: No decision to launch military action against Iraq has been taken.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister how many Christian Aid postcards urging action on Middle East peace and a peaceful resolution to the Iraq crisis he has received at Downing Street. [103170]

The Prime Minister: The Government have received over 45,000 postcards since the campaign began. The Foreign Secretary will be writing to Christian Aid, and will ask that the letter is placed on their website so that people can read it.

Adam Price: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what discussions he has had with the US Government concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following a conflict which leads to regime change; [102752]

(2) what (a) discussions he has held with and (b) representations he has received from multinational oil companies concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following any conflict in the Middle East; [102753]

(3) what discussions he has had with ministerial colleagues concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following any conflict in the Middle East. [102756]

The Prime Minister: No decision to launch military action against Iraq has been taken. It is our position that Iraqi oil is owned by the Iraqi people. Its revenues should be used for the good of the people. We make this clear in all our contacts on the subject.

However, the current situation is not about oil, it is about weapons of mass destruction and the Iraqi regime deliberately flouting the will of the United Nations.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to restrict the number of quoted companies which a single audit firm can audit at the same time. [100903]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the auditors of the public bodies sponsored by her Department. [100904]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The auditors in 2001/2002 of the public bodies sponsored by DTI are listed in the Cabinet Office publication Public Bodies 2002. The same auditors will be used in 2002–2003.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will require the Auditing Practices Board to hold public hearings before setting any auditing standard. [100906]

Miss Melanie Johnson: No. The Report of the Review of the Regulatory Regime of the Accountancy Profession, published on 29 January, recommended that the Financial Reporting Council, of which the Auditing Practices Board (APB) is a subsidiary body, should improve arrangements for transparency including ensuring easy access to clear information about the purpose of the organisation, its place in the regulatory framework and its work programme and performance, and that this should extend to the publication of summary board minutes and papers. The APB already publishes the minutes of its meetings.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will require UK companies to disclose reasons for setting up operation in offshore financial centres whose laws do not require them to publish audited accounts. [100911]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have no plans to do so. Companies are required to consolidate the activities of such vehicles in the UK parent's audited accounts if they are subsidiary undertakings.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to give audit committees of companies full access to the working papers of their auditors. [100912]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Auditors' conclusions should be shared in full with audit committees and with all company directors. Sir Robert Smith's review of the Combined Code Guidance, published on 20 January, clarifies and expands upon the existing guidance on the audit committee's role in reviewing the work of the auditor throughout the audit cycle. Copies of that report have been placed in the Libraries of the House. I have no plans to introduce a requirement on auditors to disclose all their working papers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to require the auditors of public limited companies to file copies of the audit tender with a designated regulator. [100914]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to ban auditing firms from selling off-balance sheet financing schemes to their audit clients. [100978]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are no plans to introduce such a ban. The provision of non-audit services by auditors to their clients is covered in chapter 1 of the Final Report of the Coordinating Group on Audit and Accounting Issues, published on 29 January. Copies of the Report have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to give incoming auditors a right of access to the outgoing auditor's working papers. [100979]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will give the Financial Services Authority an unrestrained right of access to the working papers of auditors. [100980]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Financial Services Authority already has powers to obtain information from auditors.

Enron

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries her Department has made into the UK operations of Enron. [100756]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Conduct reports pursuant to the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 have been received from the joint Administrators or joint Liquidators (all PriceWaterhouseCoopers) in Enron Europe Ltd. and 21 other subsidiary companies.

The Disqualification Unit of The Insolvency Service is making inquiries into those failures from the viewpoint of disqualification of the directors No decision as to whether disqualification proceedings are warranted has, however, been made.

EU Accountants

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many professional accountants there are in each member state of the European Union. [100902]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures are not available for accountants in general as there is no statutory requirement for them to be registered with a professional body.

Industrial Development Schemes

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many schemes under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in each of the last six years have covered a specific geographical area within the UK. [102803]

Alan Johnson: 14 schemes cover or have covered regional or national areas over the last six years, as follows:

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many schemes under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in Scotland have been funded (a) wholly and (b) partly by her Department. [102801]

Alan Johnson: Seven UK wide programmes operating in Scotland over the last six years were funded wholly by my Department, as follows:

- Enterprise Fund—Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme
- Enterprise Fund—UK High Technology Fund
- Phoenix Fund—support for Community Development Finance Institutions, Loan Guarantees
- UK Coal Operating Aid Scheme
- New ISERBS—Iron and Steel Re-adaptation Benefit Scheme
- Urban Post Office Reinvention Programme
- Support for redundancy payments at Scottish Coal (Deep Mine) Ltd.'s Longannet Colliery

The Department and the Scottish Executive provided a joint package of support in 2001 to Atlantic Telecom's administrators to maintain a fixed wireless network for sufficient time to allow customers to switch to alternative suppliers.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many schemes in Scotland have been funded under section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 in each of the last six years. [102802]

Alan Johnson: The use of Section 8 for schemes in Scotland only is a matter for the Scottish Executive. Eight UK wide schemes available in Scotland have been funded by my Department, or by the former Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, over the last six years. Three other schemes have been funded by the Scottish Executive, one of them jointly with my Department. A number of the schemes were introduced more than six years ago. The schemes or single payments were:

Small Business Service:

- Enterprise Fund—Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme—1981 to date
- Enterprise Fund—UK High Technology Fund—from 2001
- Phoenix Fund—support for Community Development Finance Institutions, Loan Guarantees—from 2000

2002 and is available in the Library of the House, and on the Stationery Office's website at: http://www.official-documents.co.uk/document/deps/hc/hc1007/1Q07.pdf. The Report includes information on the individual section 8 schemes.

Ministerial Meetings

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she last met representatives of the (a) Trading Standards Institute, (b) Local Authorities Co-ordinators of Regulatory Services, (c) National Consumer Council and (d) National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux; how often she meets each group; if she will make it her policy to place the minutes and agendas in the Library; and if she will make a statement. [102783]

Miss Melanie Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or I have met with Trading Standards Institute, Local Authorities Co-ordinators of Regulatory Services, National Consumer Council and Citizens Advice (including Citizens Advice Scotland) within the last six months.

Formal meetings with most of these organisations are held on a regular footing to discuss matters of mutual interest. We also meet all of them at key events throughout the year.

Minutes and agendas of these groups are not placed in the Libraries of the House and I do not intend changing that policy.

Nuclear Industry (Skills Council)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to create a skills council for the nuclear industry. [101997]

Mr. Wilson: The British Nuclear Industries Forum, the trade association for the nuclear sector, and Cogent, the Sector Skills Council for oil and gas extraction, chemicals manufacture and petroleum, are in discussion about creating Cogent Plus, a Sector Skills Council serving these four sectors plus polymers.

Like other applications for Sector Skills Council (SSC) status, the application will be subject to approval by the Sector Skills Development Agency, but this initiative has my full support. There are strong synergies between the nuclear sector and the proposed elements of Cogent Plus, and it offers a solid base for ensuring that the skills needed by the sector will be maintained and updated over the long term.

Assuming Cogent Plus is formally approved as an SSC it will take forward implementation of the recommendations set out in the report on nuclear skills published by the Department last year. These related in particular to the promotion of science and engineering to young people, the provision of support to teachers, the development of national occupational standards, the wider adoption of modern apprenticeship schemes within the nuclear sector and the building of alliances with universities with a view to the development of customised courses and academic centres of excellence capable of servicing the future needs and requirements of the nuclear sector.

Office of Fair Trading

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the OFT's long term target to clear all cases over two years old. [102797]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The OFT has set internal targets for dealing with complaints about unfair terms in consumer contracts under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. The National Audit Office notes in its recently published report, 'The Office of Fair Trading: Progress in Protecting Consumers' Interests', that the OFT has increased the size of the team dealing with unfair contract terms and has given senior managers more autonomy in order to speed up its investigations.

The NAO confirm that the OFT 'is making good progress in reducing the number of cases over two years old'.

Patent Law

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to reform patent law to enhance the rights of inventors in relation to their employers. [102529]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The possibility of enhancing the provisions in the Patents Act 1977 on compensation for employee-inventors for inventions of outstanding benefit to the employer was explored in the recent consultation on our proposed Patents Act (Amendment) Bill. We will be developing our plans in the coming months in the light of responses to that consultation.

Political Donations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to propose legislation that will require companies to disclose financial donations in kind to political parties. [100909]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are already such requirements under sections 347A to K and paragraphs 3 to 5 of Schedule 7 to the Companies Act 1985, as amended by the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000.

Public Bodies (Non-auditing Services)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the non-auditing services bought by public bodies sponsored by her Department from their auditors. [100760]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The following public bodies sponsored by DTI have bought non-auditing services from their auditors:

Coal Authority

Accounting policy and taxation advice.

National Consumer Council

Reporting to NAO on compliance with Whole of Government Accounts.

Preparation of tax computations and returns.

Reviewing financial information for the Council's Annual Review.

British Hallmarking Council	Advice on tax liability DTI Department of Trade and Industry

Rural Pharmacists

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on representations by the Scottish Executive on her policy on rural pharmacists. [101743]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The policy on rural pharmacists in Scotland is the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

US Sarabaness-Oxley Act

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what study she has made of the effect of the US Sarbanes-Oxley Act 2002 on British companies operating in the USA; and what representations she has made to US authorities on this issue. [100755]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There has been dialogue with the major business representative organisations and with various individual companies on the impact of the US Act on British companies. We have made representations at Ministerial and official levels on all aspects of the Act to the US authorities, and I raised the issue with Senators, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Public Company Accounting Oversight Board and the New York Stock Exchange during a visit to Washington and New York last month. We have also supported the European Commission in their representations to the US on the issue.

TRANSPORT

London Underground

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Central Line to re-open. [102903]

Mr. Spellar: I understand that the first services to the eastern part of the line are due to be reintroduced today. London Underground are now working to bring services back to the western part of the line, before extending them to the line as a whole.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list railway vehicles ordered for the railway network and their date for delivery; [101195]

(2) when Bombardier will deliver their Electrostar trains to South Central; [101198]

(3) if he will list the orders Bombardier has with British train operating companies. [101181]

Mr. Jamieson: The table lists all orders for railway vehicles since 1997, including orders from Bombardier:

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the inspection regime protocols covering the inspection of motor retaining bolts and brackets on the Waterloo and City Line and the Central Line and (b) protocols covering the withdrawal of Underground trains on safety grounds for each Underground line. [102397]

Mr. Jamieson: These matters are currently subject to a full investigation by LUL, with a team chaired by an independent expert and to a separate investigation by the Health and Safety Executive. The investigation results will be made public.

TREASURY

Crown Estate

John Thurso: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what directions he has given to the Crown Estate Commissioners in respect of application of section 4(1) of the Crown Estate Act, 1961; and if he will make a statement. [103131]

Mr. Boateng: None.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN Council held in Luxembourg on 7 March; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [102511]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I attended the ECOFIN meeting on 7 March. In preparation for the Spring Council on 21–22 March, ECOFIN adopted a Presidency Key Issues Paper on the Broad Economic Policy Guidelines and a related Economic Policy Committee report on structural reforms. Ministers also agreed joint reports by the Commission and the Council on pensions systems and on the future of healthcare and care for the elderly. These reports will also be sent to the Spring Council.

ECOFIN also adopted a report to the Spring Council on strengthening economic policy co-ordination. The report emphasizes the importance of the economic cycle, sustainability, and the quality of public investment and of taking a country-by-country approach to the assessment of member states' compliance with the medium-term close to balance requirement. It is therefore in line with key aspects of the UK's prudent interpretation of the Stabilityand Growth Pact.

ECOFIN agreed Council Opinions on the Stability Programmes of Portugal and Luxembourg. It also took note of a legislative text on a Recommendation on the voting modalities of the ECB's Governing Council and noted reservations by Finland and the Netherlands. The Council approved a draft statement to be entered in the minutes of the Council at the adoption of the Decision, which confirms that the reform of ECB governance arrangements should not be seen as setting a precedent for other Community institutions.

The Presidency indicated that they would seek final agreement on the tax package at an additional ECOFIN to be held on 19 March. They also indicated that agreement on energy taxation would be postponed to the ECOFIN on 19 March.ECOFIN adopted a Recommendation on the discharge of the 2001 Community Budget and adopted conclusions on priorities for the 2004 Budget.

Under any other business, the German delegation indicated that they had presented a proposal to their Parliament to levy VAT on all flights over German airspace. This was noted by other delegations.

No votes were taken at the meeting.

NHS Foundation Trusts

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions officials from his Department have had with officials from the Department of Health concerning the borrowing limits on NHS foundation trusts. [102584]

Mr. Boateng: Treasury and Department of Health officials have meetings on a regular basis to discuss matters of mutual interest

Offshore Tax Havens

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent guidelines and guidance have been given to the Inland Revenue by Ministers in respect of transactions between the Inland Revenue and entities which are operating out of offshore tax havens; and if he will make a statement. [95827]

Norman Lamb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken to prevent public assets being transferred to companies based in tax havens. [99080]

Mr. Boateng: A number of reforms have already been introduced relating to the project management of major procurement exercises.

The Government are currently reviewing existing guidance on tax aspects of Government procurement to safeguard value for money for Government as a whole.

Public Service Agreements

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Public Service Agreement targets will be reported on as part of the web-based reporting of targets; in what month the first data will be published; and if he will make a statement. [102882]

Mr. Boateng: The Government plan to introduce web-based reporting from April 2003. This will cover the targets published in Spending Review 2002: Public Service Agreements 2003–06 (Cm 5571).

Sterling Valuation

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the (a) highest and (b) lowest value of the pound has been with respect to (i) the euro and (ii) the dollar in each year that is applicable since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [102927]

Ruth Kelly: Data on bilateral exchange rates can be obtained from the Office for National Statistics, or from the Bank of England website.

The Government do not comment on day-to-day movements in the foreign exchange markets. The Government's objective for the exchange rate remains a stable and competitive pound in the medium term.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Recipients

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many recipients of (a) disability living allowance and (b) incapacity benefit there were, broken down by (i) region, (ii) age and (iii) type of disability in each of the last 10 years. [101766]

Maria Eagle: The information has been placed in the Library.

British Sign Language

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps his Department has taken to (a) recognise British Sign Language and (b) improve access to public services for British Sign Language users; and if he will make a statement. [102900]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have held discussions with various interested organisations, the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) requires service providers to consider making reasonable adjustments to the way they provide their services so they are accessible to disabled people. The provision of a BSL interpreter could be considered a reasonable adjustment. The DRC's Code of Practice (Rights, Goods, Facilities, Services and Premises) includes examples of situations where providing a BSL interpreter might be a reasonable adjustment.

The Government have funded projects with the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People and the Royal National Institute for Deaf People to increase the number of BSL interpreters and to improve the infrastructure for interpreter training and assessment.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the implications of recent developments in paediatric medicine requiring intensive nursing support by parents for the start date of disability living allowance payments for children being discharged from hospital; and if he will make a statement. [101345]

Maria Eagle: Developments in paediatric medicine do not alter the rules for the start date of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) for children being discharged from hospital. For all rates and components of DLA, the qualifying rules must have been satisfied for a period of at least three months before DLA can be paid. Where that qualifying period has been completed, the payment of DLA claimed and awarded while children are in hospital starts when they are discharged to their home address. Payments of DLA are reinstated on discharge for children who were receiving the allowance before they went into hospital for more than 12 weeks.

Employers' Liability

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions which organisations were invited to submit evidence to the Review on employers' liability; and which organisations submitted evidence. [102377]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 11 March 2003]: The following organisations were invited to contribute to the review of employers' liability insurance:

Association of British Insurers
Association of Personal Injury Lawyers
British Chambers of Commerce
British Insurance Brokers' Association
Confederation of British Industry
Engineering Employers Federation
Federation of Small Businesses
Forum of Insurance Lawyers
Forum of Private Business
Institute of Directors
Institute of Insurance Brokers
Lloyd's Non Marine Association
Trades Union Congress

A range of trade associations were contacted. In addition all interested stakeholders were invited through the website of the Department for Work and Pensions to submit their views to the review team.

A list of the organisations that submitted evidence will be made available after the report of the review has been published.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions which sources of statistical evidence were used in connection with the review of employers' liability; and if he will publish the statistical evidence presented to the review. [102379]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 11 March 2003]: A list of the organisations and the statistical evidence they submitted will be made available after the report of the review has been published.

Fairground Safety

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answers of 19 December 2002, Official Report, columns 999–1000W, on fairground safety, when the National Fairground Inspection Team was established; what its terms of reference are; how many members it has; to whom it reports; and what recommendations it has made since its establishment. [100770]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The National Fairground Inspection Team was established in April 2002.

The terms of reference and purpose of the National Fairground Inspection Team are to provide the operational contribution to the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE's) strategy and workplan for fairground safety. This involves inspection, investigation and other initiatives to address significant risks. It also secures compliance with health and safety law and improves safety management in the industry. The team provides a focus for fairground inspection and ensures continuity of expertise.

The team is made up of local inspectors from HSE's Field Operations Directorate (FOD) located at HSE offices throughout the country. There are currently 37 inspectors and 12 principal inspectors who are nominated members of the National Fairground Inspection Team. Inspectors are not dedicated full time to the team but carry out their fairgrounds work in a planned way as part of their normal range of work. In addition, the Team may call on specialised disciplines (e.g. mechanical, structural, electrical, medical etc.) within HSE, and use the services of specialist contractors should the need arise.

The team is directed and coordinated by HSE's Food and Entertainment Sector and reports through the HSE Director Scotland to the Director of Field Operations.

The National Fairground Inspection Team does not make direct recommendations but provides operational intelligence to inform the HSE strategy and how it can best be taken forward.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many named day written questions were tabled to the Department between 15 October 2002 and 24 February 2003; how many that received a holding answer were given a substantive answer (a) within three days, (b) within seven days, (c) within 14 days, (d) within 28 days and (e) over 28 days later; and what procedures the Department has in place to monitor performance on answering (i) parliamentary questions and (ii) ministerial letters. [99425]

Maria Eagle: 331 questions for answer on a named day were received from 15 October and 24 February. 199 were given holding replies, of which 54 were given substantive replies within three days, 42 within seven days, 69 within 14 days, 19 within 28 days and eight over 28 days. Many of these named day questions sought information of a detailed nature which required further analysis and work by officials in order to provide an answer.

With regard to monitoring performance of parliamentary questions, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 13 February 2003, Official Report, column 966W.

The Cabinet Office, on an annual basis, publishes a report to Parliament on the performance of Departments in replying to ministerial correspondence. The report for 2001 was published on 24 May 2002, Official Report, column 674W. The report for 2002 will be published in due course.

Pollution

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how much has been levied in fines by the Health and Safety Executive against (a) companies, (b) local authorities and (c) individuals with regard to incidences of pollution broken down by the type of pollution incidence, (i) in total, (ii) in each region and (iii) per fine in each year since 1995; [99258]

(2) what assessment has been made or is planned of the effectiveness of fines levied by the Health and Safety Executive on polluters in preventing (a) further incidences of pollution by the polluters and (b) incidences of pollution from others who have not previously polluted; what changes are planned; and if he will make a statement. [99259]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) does not levy fines. When appropriate, HSE brings, or in Scotland recommends, prosecutions so that the courts may consider imposing fines following any conviction.

Responsibility for regulating environmental pollution does not reside with HSE. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) and HSE have limited statutory responsibility in respect of the environment. Where they do have environmental involvement, HSE's activity is defined by the scope of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. These matters include legislation involving control of major accident hazards, licensing and decommissioning of nuclear reactors, carriage of dangerous goods, notification of new substances, biocidal products, non-agricultural pesticides and Genetically Modified Organisms (GMOs).

HSE does have an enforcement role in these areas, and the boundaries between its role and those of the Environment Agency (EA) and Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA), are set out in Memoranda of Understanding. These can be viewed on the HSE's website at www.hse.qov.uk.

Smoking

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what advice is given to employers about provision of smoke free working and rest areas for employees. [99981]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: All employers have a duty under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to protect the health, safety and welfare of their employees, and this duty includes any risks arising from passive smoking.

More specifically, the Workplace (Health Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 require employers to protect non-smokers from discomfort caused by tobacco smoke in rest rooms and rest areas. This means that employers must either provide separate rest rooms/areas for smokers and non smokers or prohibit smoking in rest rooms/areas.

Free guidance published by HSE provides advice to employers on introducing effective smoking policies in the workplace. The guidance advises that employers must ensure that there are arrangements to protect non-smokers from discomfort caused by tobacco smoke in rest rooms or rest areas.

The guidance recommends that smoking policies in the workplace should give priority to the needs of non-smokers who do not wish to breathe tobacco smoke.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what policy his Department has adopted on smoking in the workplace. [100928]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: In all our businesses, smoking is banned within all public areas and also within open plan working areas.

Arrangements are made locally on a site by site basis in consultation with staff the procedures for those who smoke. Smoking rooms are provided where space allows.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the introduction of an Approved Code of Practice for smoking in the workplace. [100947]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Government are currently looking at possible options to reduce the exposure of people to tobacco smoke.

We will announce our conclusions in due course about how best we will achieve further progress in this area.

Written Answers to Questions

CABINET OFFICE

Advertising Expenditure (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102325]

Mr. Alexander: Due to the format in which advertising information is held, to provide the information as requested would result in disproportionate costs.

Public and Advisory Bodies

Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the criteria are for classifying public and advisory bodies as (a) executive non-departmental public bodies, (b) advisory non-departmental public bodies, (c) task forces, (d) ad hoc advisory groups and (e) reviews; and what particular qualities or characteristics distinguish these bodies from each other. [102521]

Mr. Alexander: Generally, executive non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) operate under statutory provisions and are legally incorporated; their functions cover a national remit (including the devolved assemblies); appointments to the Board of the NDPB are made by Ministers, or by the Queen on ministerial advice; such appointments must be made in accordance with the Code of Practice of the Commissioner for Public Administration (OCPA); the chief executive is accountable to the Board; the NDPB has its own budget; staff are employed directly by the body itself (and are not civil servants); and Ministers are answerable to Parliament for the NDPB and have the powers to wind it up subject to, where appropriate, the approval of Parliament or, where a Royal Charter has previously been granted, of the Queen.

Advisory NDPBs are usually set up administratively by Ministers, or by the Queen on ministerial advice, without the need for legislation; those appointed to the Board are independent of Government and drawn from outside the public sector; the NDPB should be a standing body existing for more than one year and meeting at least annually; the Board has a defined membership and clear terms of reference; as with executive NDPBs, appointments are subject to the OCPA Code of Practice and the remit tends to have a national focus; the Board is usually supported by staff from within the sponsoring department but is not part of a department or agency; generally the NDPB does not prepare its own accounts and instead is accounted for through the books of the sponsoring department; and Ministers are answerable to Parliament for the body and may wind it up.

There is little to distinguish between task forces, ad hoc advisory groups and reviews. These bodies can be defined in various ways. However, the Government's response to the Sixth 'Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life' gave 3 criteria as a definition:

Membership drawn from the wider public sector and/or voluntary organisations and/or the private sector

A lifetime normally of less than 2 years;

A remit focused on a single issue.

Some of these bodies may go on to become classified as NDPBs where the need for the body's advice continues beyond its original life span e.g. the Better Regulation Task Force, Skills Task Force and the New Deal Task Force.

Finally, as their name indicates executive NDPBs will be largely concerned with an operational or executive function while an advisory NDPB would be more likely to provide specific advice in a specialised field. Both executive and advisory NDPBs tend to be more formal and likely to run for longer than task forces, ad hoc advisory groups and reviews. The choice of the most appropriate body to be set up in a given situation will depend upon all of the criteria described here, and ministerial judgment about what would be most suitable for the intended purpose.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Agriculture/Horticulture

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she is taking to raise public understanding of agriculture and horticulture in the UK; and how much her Department has spent, broken down by category, on such measures since 1997. [102439]

Alun Michael: The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs is responsible for policies on sustainable farming and food, including plant health, plant variety rights and all aspects of horticulture. The activities and actions of the Department and its Ministers are aimed at developing and promoting these policies as cost-effectively and efficiently as possible. Defra aims to promote sustainable, diverse, modern and adaptable farming through domestic and international actions and to promote a sustainable and safe food supply chain which meets consumers' requirements.

Defra produces a number of agricultural publications, including "Agriculture in the United Kingdom", which is published annually in association with the devolved administrations. In response to a recommendation of the EFRA Select Committee in its recent report "The Future of UK Agriculture in a Changing World", Defra will publish an annual assessment of the state of the agriculture industry and its future prospects in an international context.

Defra was formed in June 2001. The Department does not maintain records of its publicity expenditure in the categories set out in the hon. Gentleman's question. To undertake attempts to identify the closest equivalents to them would incur disproportionate cost.

Capita

Mr. Paul Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the reply of 20 February, Official Report, column 83W, on Capita, if she will list for each of the contracts awarded by her Department to Capita since 8th June 2001 (a) start and finish date of contract, (b) value of contract, (c) evaluation mechanism for successful delivery of contract, (d) penalty charges for failure to deliver, (e) penalty charges incurred, (f) service level agreements and (g) contract numbers; and if she will make a statement. [100458]

Alun Michael: Between June 2001 and December 2002 the Department made payments of £1,551,203 to the Capita Group in connection with the services identified in the Official Report, column 83W of 20 February. From information held centrally the Department is not aware that any contractual or legal remedies for specific non-performance have needed to be invoked and considers that the Capita Group has delivered the contracted services to the standards required.

The terms of contracts between the Department and its suppliers are commercially confidential.

Further information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Chewing Gum

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans her Department has to tackle discarded chewing gum. [102598]

Alun Michael: Defra's consultation document "Living Places—Powers, Rights, Responsibilities", includes two options relating to chewing gum: R8—to include discarded chewing gum as litter to which existing litter duties and powers apply, and; F3—restricting the availability of chewing gum in areas degraded by persistent littering. The consultation closed on 14 February 2003. We are now in the process of assessing all the comments and considering, with other Government Departments and stakeholders as necessary, how best to take matters forward, including, where appropriate, proposals for legislation.

English Rural Development Programme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will publish her proposed expenditure for each of the next three years under the English rural development programme, broken down by scheme. [103146]

Alun Michael: The proposed expenditure on schemes under the England rural development programme is:

£ million

Scheme	2003–04	2004–05	2005–06
Countryside Stewardship Scheme	81	96	111
Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme	48	48	48
Organic Farming Scheme	22	23	23
Farm Woodland Premium Scheme	11	12	13
Woodland Grant Scheme	21	22	22
Hill Farming Allowance	35	27	27
Rural Enterprise Scheme	24	36	36
Processing and Marketing Grant	8	8	8
Vocational Training Scheme	4	4	4
Energy Crops Scheme	5	5	5

The table does not include possible new schemes that would require modification of the ERDP and are subject to Commission approval. For example, we recently launched a pilot entry level agri-environment scheme and we have said that if this pilot is successful we intend to introduce the full scheme in England in 2005. Additional funding would have to be made available in 2005–06 to operate the scheme.

Scheme	Total Number of agreements approved	Number of agreements approved between 2000–02[1,2]	Scheme budget 2000–06 (£ million)
Countryside Stewardship Scheme	13,858	6,290	481
Environmentally Sensitive Areas	12,300	1,677	330
Organic Farming Scheme	N/a	1,085	141
Woodland Grant Scheme	32,748	7,058	139
Farm Woodland Premium Scheme/Farm Woodland Scheme	10,059	2,389	77
Energy Crops Scheme	N/a	31	32
Hill Farm Allowance[2]	N/a	9,953	254

Note:

Figures for number of approved agreements are provisional as some agreements for 2002 remain to be processed. Agreements entered into before 2000 are excluded.

For Hill Farm Allowance, figure relates to number of payments made on claims received in 2002 rather than agreements approved over the years 2000 to 2002.

It is not possible directly to compare the value of approved agreements in a givenyear with the budget for that year, because (a) the majority of agreements under the land-based schemes are for commitments lasting ten years or more and with payments made annually; (b) first payments under individual agreements may not always be made in the same year as the agreement is approved; and (c) much of the current budget for land-based schemes is expended on commitments entered into before the ERDP began in 2000.

In financial year 2000–01, 83 per cent. of the total budget available for the ERDP land-based schemes was spent, and in financial year 2001–02, 89 per cent. of the total budget available for the ERDP land-based schemes was spent.

GM Crops

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs against what criteria the outcome of the public debate on genetically modified crops will be judged. [103053]

Mr. Meacher: The Government will judge the outcome of the public debate on the opportunities that it has presented people to gain a fuller understanding of the wider issues surrounding genetic modification and to reach their own judgement. The Government set up an independent public debate steering board that announced its own indicators against which it would assess the success of the debate. These include the extent to which people felt they were able to participate, their awareness of the debate, whether it was credible and innovative, and whether it improved the present understanding of public views.

GMOs

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to prepare draft legislation on (a) health, (b) environmental and (c) economic liability arising from the release of GMOs. [103052]

Mr. Meacher: The European Commission has issued proposals, which are being considered by the Council and the European Parliament, for an EU environmental liability regime covering the release of GMOs. This focuses on potential damage to biodiversity. The Government will consider whether domestic rules on GMO liability might be needed after it is has received a report due this summer from the Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission.

Greenhouse Gas

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps her Department is taking to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in the form of methane from disused coal mines; and what estimate she has made of the cost of tackling such pollution. [102069]

Mr. Meacher: As yet there is no reliable measure of the amount of methane escaping from disused coal mines. Current estimates vary from 0.3 per cent. to 2 per cent. of UK greenhouse gas emissions. My Department, in consultation with the industry, have commissioned an independent study to provide an accurate estimate of methane emissions from this source which will report in two years time.

Defra supported the coal mine methane industry in its application for exemption from the climate change levy. This application was successful, and secured for the industry an 80 per cent. discount on the levy subject to state aid approval from the European Commission. This will improve the viability of the industry.

Since the launch of the UK emissions trading scheme in April 2002 Defra has worked with the industry to overcome obstacles to their entry into the scheme. Defra is also engaging with the European Commission on their proposal for extending the EU emissions trading scheme to include a project mechanism in due course, which may allow credits to be claimed for coal mine methane projects.

The Government consider that extending the renewables obligation to include coal mine methane would not be consistent with the objectives of the obligation, since coal mine methane is, self-evidently, not a renewable. However, we are very supportive of this industry and are keen to help it expand so that it can continue to reduce emissions throughout the UK.

Until there is an accurate estimate of what is actually being emitted from disused mines in the UK, it is not possible to make an accurate estimate of the cost of tackling the issue.

Nappies

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will estimate the total (a) energy, (b) resource use, (c) volume of waste and (d) water use; from (i) a real nappy and (ii) a disposable nappy; and if she will make an assessment of their overall relative environmental impacts. [99246]

Mr. Meacher: The environmental impact of disposable nappies is adverse; however we don't at present have quantifiable data on this.

The Environment Agency is currently carrying out a life cycle analysis which compares the environmental impact of re-usable and disposable nappies and clarifies information already contained in the existing life cycle analysis. We expect the work to be completed in early summer.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of (a) how many disposable nappies would be used if all those who used real nappies were to switch to the use of disposable nappies and (b) the overall environmental impact of such a change. [99248]

Mr. Meacher: Assuming that 10 per cent. of parents use re-usable nappies (current estimates give a figure of 5 per cent. to 15 per cent.), a switch to disposable nappies is estimated to lead to a 0.2 per cent. to 0.3 per cent. increase in the proportion of the municipal waste stream constituted by nappies. This would increase the current level from 2 per cent. to 3 per cent. to approximately 2.2 per cent. to 3.3 per cent., and worsen the overall environmental impact, although the effects cannot at present be quantified.

The Environment Agency is currently carrying out a life cycle analysis which compares the environmental impact of re-usable and disposal nappies and clarifies information already contained in existing life cycle analysis. We expect the work will be completed in the early summer.

Ruddy Ducks

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the estimated cost is of her Department's plans to reduce the numbers of the ruddy duck. [102339]

Margaret Beckett: The Department has completed the ruddy duck control trial and will spend an additional £100,000 this financial year on research work into refining control methods for the ruddy duck. Further research will be undertaken in 2003–04. Final decisions have not yet been taken on the allocation of the research budget, but the expected expenditure is around £¼ million. We also propose to participate in a white-headed duck workshop to be held later this year in Morocco. The workshop will consider various control methods used on ruddy ducks throughout Europe and North Africa. Expenditure in future years has not been decided.

Secondments

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the reply of 11 March, Official Report, column 150W, on secondments, if she will list the NGOs who have seconded staff to her Department. [103438]

Alun Michael: [pursuant to his answer, 11 March 2003, Official Report, column 150W], the NGOs concerned are:

Chemical Industrial Association
Envirowise
Forum for the Future
Groundwork
Global to Local Imperial College
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds (2)
Tidy Britain Group (Environmental Campaigns)
TXU Warm Front
Warwick University
World Wildlife Fund (2)

Tyres

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the environmental impact of (a) retread and (b) new tyres, using a life-cycle analysis approach. [99235]

Mr. Meacher: In 2001, BLIC (the liaison office of the European rubber industry) produced a life cycle analysis of car tyres. The report did not specify the environmental load of retreaded tyres, but did highlight the importance of rolling resistance as a factor in determining its benefits.

Retreaded tyres, nevertheless, would seem to offer a number of advantages as an end-of-life recovery option because of the reduced requirement for raw materials in their manufacture, as compared with new tyres, and by providing the tyre with another life, thereby reducing the numbers of new tyres needed, and subsequently requiring disposal.

The Department of Trade and Industry has recently commissioned a further study to examine the environmental credentials of tyre retreading.

Waste Management

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what the Government's policy is on building new (a) incinerators and (b) waste to energy plants; [100475]

(2) what guidance she has issued to local authorities about building new (a) incinerators and (b) waste to energy plants; [100476]

(3) what percentage of UK waste the Government expect to dispose of through (a) incinerators and (b) waste to energy plants in the next five years. [100474]

Mr. Meacher: Waste Strategy 2000 (Cm4693–2) sets out our policies for sustainable waste management and the steps to achieving them. Minimising waste production and maximising re-use and recycling of waste are central to that policy.

Our policy on municipal waste incinerators or other energy from waste facilities is that they should only be considered where it can be shown that they are appropriately sized so that they would not "crowd out" recycling. They should also include, wherever possible, combined heat and power systems which produce electricity and provide effective heating for homes and businesses.

The Government have no plans for the number of incinerators or other energy from waste facilities that local authorities should provide, nor are there any targets for the production of energy from waste. The Regulatory Impact Assessment of Waste Strategy 2000 (published in Annex C of Part 2 of the strategy) assessed a variety of waste management scenarios and provided broad ranges for numbers of required facilities. Variables included different projections for waste growth, different mixes of waste management facilities, and differing levels of participation in recycling schemes. A similar exercise was carried out by the Strategy Unit and published in their report "Waste not, Want not" in November last year.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the self-reported breaches of emissions regulations by waste incinerator operators for (a) 2001 and (b) 2002. [102204]

Mr. Meacher: The numbers of breaches of emission limits recorded by the Environment Agency for municipal waste incinerators in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 are shown in the table.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs where (a) incinerators and (b) waste to energy plant, feature in the Government's waste hierarchy. [100692]

Mr. Meacher: The waste hierarchy, in Waste Strategy 2000 (Cm 4693–1) sets out the order in which options for waste management should be considered based on environmental impact. Following the hierarchy the best option is reduction (waste minimisation) followed in order by re-use, recycling, composting, energy recovery, and disposal.

Wood (Fuel)

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the environmental impact of (a) burning wood as a fuel and (b) increasing the use of wood as fuel. [101292]

Alun Michael: Burning of wood from sustainably managed forests for energy production does not contribute to the UK's carbon dioxide emissions as the gas released through combustion will be absorbed by new tree growth. Wood combustion does contribute to the UK's emissions of methane and nitrousoxide. These gases have a global warming potential, but even when this is taken into account, the overall impact, in terms of greenhouse gas emissions per unit of energy input, is unlikely to exceed 15 per cent. of the impact of fossil fuel combustion for wood burnt domestically in open grates, or 5 per cent.of the impact of fossil fuel combustion for wood burnt in combustion plant.

Emissions associated with the management, harvesting and transportation of wood are small relative to total energy content of the wood. Nevertheless minimising transportation distances and improving the efficiency of transportation should be included as factors in the evaluation of proposals for new wood fuel developments.

The combustion of wood, as opposed to coal or oil, produces low emissions of sulphur dioxide as wood has a lower sulphur content. Wood also tends to be burnt at lower temperatures than coal or oil which, in general, results in lower emissions of oxides of nitrogen compared to those from other fuels. Burning wood can also produce small amounts of benzene, particles, lead and polycylic aromatic hydrocarbons. Estimates of emissions of the main air pollutants from domestic and industrial wood combustion, compared with the UK totals, are set out in the Appendix.

Depending on the soil in which the biomass is grown, wood can contain heavy metals which on burning are retained in the ash. Inefficient burning can leave some carbon in the ash therefore polyaromatic hydrocarbons must also be considered. If concentration thresholds for either are exceeded, ash should be disposed of in a controlled manner. However a recent compilation of data on UK wood suggests that heavy metal concentration in ash will not constitute a hazard to human health or the environment. Since ash contains a range of important nutrients there is the possibility of returning it as a fertiliser to forests.

An overall assessment of the emissions impact from an increase in the use of wood as fuel depends on the fuel it replaces, the efficiency of the combustion systems and the abatement technology used.

Greater use of wood fuel can assist in limiting CO_2 emissions, and other emissions can be minimised by maximising the efficiency of the combustion process, and by installing appropriate abatement control. Increases in the use of wood will be largely based on efficient and environmentally friendly systems developed to meet stringent emission standards. Grant schemes introduced recently to encourage greater use of biomass specify highly efficient combustion and abatement systems.

Additional markets for wood will encourage more active management of forests which in turn will encourage their regeneration whilst improving structural diversity and biodiversity.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghan Refugees

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the number of Afghan refugees in (a) Pakistan and (b) Iran; and what financial support she is giving to each group. [102741]

Clare Short: The numbers of refugees still in exile fluctuate constantly. At the beginning of this year, UNHCR estimated that two million refugees remained in Iran and 1.5 million in Pakistan.

DFID is supporting refugee programmes through various UN agencies and NGOs. Overall we have contributed over £5.8 million for refugee programmes administered by UNHCR and a further £1 million to a variety of other agencies also involved in refugee assistance.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on levels of (a) malnutrition and (b) violence against women among Afghan refugees in refugee camps in (i) Pakistan and (ii) Iran. [102743]

Clare Short: Neither DFID nor its implementing partners that assist refugees (UNHCR, WFP, ICRC) have specific information on malnutrition or levels of violence in refugee camps.

WFP estimates that over 50 per cent. of children under five in Afghanistan are chronically malnourished while acute malnutrition affects less than 10 per cent. of the population. I have just approved a further £700,000 for WFP's operations in Afghanistan that include food assistance to vulnerable people still in camps.

We have contributed £5.8 million this financial year to UNHCR's programmes for refugees in Pakistan and Iran. These include a component for monitoring of camps, protection officers and funding for legal aid for vulnerable people including women.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the number of internally displaced people in Afghanistan; and what support she is providing for them. [102742]

Clare Short: According to UNHCR reports there are still around 700,000 internally displaced people (IDPs) in Afghanistan. The continuing drought in the South is I understand, causing further displacement.

During 2002, international agencies helped over 250,000 IDPs to return home. And a further 200,000 are estimated to have returned home on their own. In the current financial year we have contributed £5.8 million to UNHCR's programmes for IDPs and returnees, including £1.8 million this month. The continuing challenge in Afghanistan is to help meet the basic needs of the most vulnerable people, whilst building Government capacity for sustainable reconstruction. We remain fully committed to these ends.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department has had with leaders in the Democratic Republic of Congo regarding allowing the UN Mission in the Democratic Republic of Congo unlimited access to (a) areas and (b) evidence for its investigations. [103114]

Clare Short: The Government have made repeated calls for all parties in the DRC to allow free access to MONUC to fulfil its mandate. We have interceded with different authorities on a number of specific occasions to support the work of MONUC in humanitarian and peace-keeping operations. This has included pressing the Forces Armees Congolaises (FAC) to allow inspectors access to military airports; the Rassemblement Congolaise pour la Democratie-Goma (RCD-G) to allow humanitarian access to the conflict afflicted Haut Plateau; and the Mouvement pour la Liberation du Congo (MLC) to assist investigation into alleged human rights abuses committed by its forces. We continue to press all parties to facilitate MONUC's access to all areas of the DRC and to co-operate fully with its investigations.

Drugs Re-selling

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of re-selling low-priced drugs from the developing world back to the developed world; and what steps are being taken to address this issue. [103085]

Clare Short: The high cost of drugs is a key barrier to poor people's ability to access essential medicines. The pharmaceutical industry, in partnership with the international community and donor governments, provide some medicines at preferential prices to the developing world. The Government have been working with partners to make a major advance towards the widespread and sustainable access to medicines to the world's poor, including through pharmaceutical companies providing medicines for HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria at close to the cost of manufacture. However there is a risk that such medicines can be diverted and sold by 'middle men' back to developed country markets where they can be sold at a higher price. The extent of this problem can vary. Last year one company reported that roughly 25 per cent. of its preferentially priced AIDS medicines were diverted back to the EU.

Our High Level Working Group on increasing Access to Essential Medicines examined ways of minimising the problem. In the long-term, strengthening developing country health systems will better equip countries to minimise product leakage. DFID has committed over £1.5 billion since 1997 to health systems strengthening in poorer countries. Other strategies to minimise diversion include, developing distinctive packaging and labelling of preferentially priced medicines, and implementing customs regulations in wealthier markets which prohibit re- importation. The European Union is currently discussing a regulation which would include such measures.

Global Health Fund (Malawi)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of Malawi's proposal to the Global Health Fund, with particular reference to the issue of an upper limit on proposals; and if she will make a statement. [103106]

Clare Short: US$196 million was awarded to the Malawi Global Fund Coordinating Committee in August 2002 for HIV/AIDS. This is currently the largest GFATM award in Africa. A further USD 40 million was approved in February 2003 for scaling up prevention and treatment of Malaria.

A review of Global Fund proposals in five countries, including Malawi, was undertaken in August 2002. It highlights the challenge in Malawi to absorb the additional finance given the prevailing health service infrastructure. There are major shortages of appropriately trained staff. The public sector is experiencing high attrition both from dissatisfaction with terms and conditions of service and as a direct result of AIDS. The GFATM proposal also requires extensive laboratory facilities which are currently lacking and qualified technicians and are in short supply.

Accordingly the Global Fund is phased so that initial stages concentrate on building capacity for service delivery. The Global Fund proposal is complemented by several other initiatives in the health sector, including work supported by my Department in strengthening essential medical laboratory services, medical supplies management, and improved mechanisms for coordinating donor support. The DFID mainstreaming strategy will help strengthen the institutional framework for a multi-sectoral HIV response by supporting posts in government and key institutions including WHO, UNAIDS and the World bank.

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her policy is on the recommendations of the report of the Commission on Intellectual Property rights; and if she will make a statement. [103096]

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the report of the Commission on Intellectual Property Rights in respect of patents. [103634]

Clare Short: The Government will publish its response to the report of the Commission on Intellectual Property Rights very shortly and will be available at www.dfid.gov.uk. A written statement will also be made to the House.

International Organisation for Migration

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial resources her Department has allocated to the International Organisation for Migration in each year since 1997. [101734]

Clare Short: DFID's funding for IOM's operational budget since 1997 is as follows (figures in US dollars):

	US $
1997	300,000
1998	1,203,482
1999	2,977,297
2000	3,120,757
2001	5,504,559
2002	8,147,087

The above figures exclude reimbursable services and projects jointly funded with the Home Office that can not be separately disaggregated from other UK Government funding.

In addition DFID has contributed 50 per cent. of the UK's membership fees to IOM since the UK rejoined IOM in June 2001. These amounted to £517,242 (DFID share £258,621) in 2001 and £952,470 (DFID share £476,235) in 2002.

Iraq

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of people in Iraq she estimates had access to clean water in (a) 1980, (b) 1990, (c) 1996, (d) 1998 and (e) 2000. [101733]

Clare Short: It is difficult to find clear statistics on access to clean water in Iraq. The WHO/UNICEF Joint Monitoring Programme for Water Supply and Sanitation Coverage, the official UN reference system for monitoring water coverage statistics, provides figures for most of the years in question. (Given the difficulties in routinely measuring safe water, their surveys measure the presence of water facilities of different technology types. Improved water supplies are defined as those inherently safer than other types of supplies. They include: household connection; public standpipe; bore hole; protected dug well; protected spring; or rainwater collection. Not improved water supplies include: unprotected well; unprotected spring; vendor-provided water; bottled water; tanker truck-provided water.) In their estimates for 1980–2000, the following figures for access to improved water supplies in Iraq are provided:

Percentage

Year	Urban	Rural
1985	100	54
1988	100	72
1990	93	41
2000 (estimate)	96	48

DFID cannot confirm the reliability of these figures. It should be noted that, while water is supplied to most urban households (and therefore classified as 'improved'), a high proportion of this water is not treated. There are also understood to be significant regional disparities in supply coverage within Iraq.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of UN personnel in Iraq are Iraqi nationals. [102739]

Clare Short: Until recently, Iraqi nationals comprised around 80 per cent. of UN personnel in Iraq. However, over recent weeks the numbers of UN international staff have been reducing, resulting in an increase to the proportion of national staff.

South America (Development Aid)

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the three largest development projects on the South American continent supported by her Department. [102234]

Clare Short: DFID has country programmes in Bolivia, Brazil and Peru in South America reflecting the severity and depth of poverty in these countries. They form part of our regional strategy in Latin America that aims to reduce poverty by working with governments, civil society and the international community in the areas of pro-poor growth, social inclusion and pro-poor governance.

Details (DFID figures available by financial year, EC figures by calendar year):

£ million

Country	UK bilateral assistance 2001–02 Includes DFID programmes, CDC investments and debt relief	DFID share of EC assistance 2001
Bolivia	31.5	3.5
Brazil	7.0	9.2
Peru	8.9	2.8

Further details are available in DFID's Country Strategy Paper for Bolivia which is available in the Libraries of the House. DFID's Country Strategy Paper for Brazil and Country Assistance Plan for Peru are currently being finalised. I will place copies in the House Libraries when they become available.

West Africa

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial resources her Department has allocated to the UN agencies and NGOs that are providing assistance to third country nationals, refugees and returnees in West Africa. [102265]

Clare Short: I have recently approved £5 million for several humanitarian interventions in response to the United Nations Consolidated Appeals for West Africa. This comprises contributions to UN organisations, the International Committee for the Red Cross programmes in Cote D'Ivoire, Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone; to Medicins Sans Frontiere (B) for a health project in Liberia and to Merlin for a health intervention in Cote D'Ivoire. This is in addition to substantial contributions from DFID last year.

World Water Assessment Programme

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department's response is to the World Water Assessment Programme's recent report. [102811]

Clare Short: Nearly two thirds of the world's population will be living in countries of significant water stress by the year 2025, with the increasing possibility of conflicts over water becoming more common. One in five people in the world lack access to safe drinking water and nearly half lack access to sanitation. Misuse of resources and poor management have resulted in depleted supplies, falling water tables, shrinking inland lakes and stream flows reduced to ecologically unsustainable levels. In addition water pollution, from mainly human activities, is decreasing the amount of water suitable for many uses. At the Johannesburg World Summit on Sustainable Development strong commitments were made for better management of water resources and improved access to drinking water and sanitation and these must now be implemented.

In this context, initiatives that support the assessment of water resources and build capacity for the sustainable management of available resources are increasingly important. The UNESCO led World Water Assessment Programme (WWAP), has been supported by DFID, from its outset in mid-2000. It is an effective long-term Programme providing assessment, monitoring and reporting of the people-centred status of the world's water. The UN World Water Development Report (WWDR)—'Water for People Water for Life' which has just been released, is the first major output from the programme and will be presented at the 3rd world water forum in Kyoto, Japan, this week. The report represents the combined efforts of 23 UN agencies and convention secretariats and is now the most comprehensive and up-to-date information on the state of the world's freshwater resources. The availability of rigorous and authoritative water information at appropriate scales in the public domain will influence actions by others and allow critical issues to be identified.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Iraq

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the legal basis for military intervention against Iraq. [102902]

The Solicitor-General [pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer, 14 March 2003, c. 482W]: The Attorney-General has given a written answer to a question from Baroness Ramsey in the House of Lords today in the following terms:

Authority to use force against Iraq exists from the combined effect of resolutions 678, 687 and 1441. All of these resolutions were adopted under Chapter VII of the UN Charter which allows the use of force for the express purpose of restoring international peace and security:

> 1. In resolution 678 the Security Council authorised force against Iraq, to eject it from Kuwait and to restore peace and security in the area.
> 2. In resolution 687, which set out the ceasefire conditions after Operation Desert Storm, the Security Council imposed continuing obligations on Iraq to eliminate its weapons of mass destruction in order to restore international peace and security in the area. Resolution 687 suspended but did not terminate the authority to use force under resolution 678.
> 3. A material breach of resolution 687 revives the authority to use force under resolution 678.
> 4. In resolution 1441 the Security Council determined that Iraq has been and remains in material breach of resolution 687, because it has not fully complied with its obligations to disarm under that resolution.
> 5. The Security Council in resolution 1441 gave Iraq "a final opportunity to comply with its disarmament obligations" and warned Iraq of the "serious consequences" if it did not.
> 6. The Security Council also decided in resolution 1441 that, if Iraq failed at any time to comply with and co-operate fully in the implementation of resolution 1441, that would constitute a further material breach.
> 7. It is plain that Iraq has failed so to comply and therefore Iraq was at the time of resolution 1441 and continues to be in material breach.
> 8. Thus, the authority to use force under resolution 678 has revived and so continues today.
> 9. Resolution 1441 would in terms have provided that a further decision of the Security Council to sanction force was required if that had been intended. Thus, all that resolution 1441 requires is reporting to and discussion by the Security Council of Iraq's failures, but not an express further decision to authorise force.

I have lodged a copy of this answer, together with resolutions 678, 687 and 1441 in the Library of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Arts Council of England

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the administrative cost of the Arts Council of England to each Government Office of the Region was in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03. [103014]

Dr. Howells: There is no cost to the regional Government offices for the running of the Arts Council of England. The full administrative cost is met out of the annual grant-in-aid allocation made to it by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport.

English Heritage

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the security implications of English Heritage's placing of photographs of private buildings on the internet under its Images of England project. [102146]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has a legal duty to compile and publish lists of buildings of special architectural or historic importance. These lists are in the public domain, and can be accessed through local authorities, records offices, libraries, English Heritage and DCMS. Many other groups will also hold information on listed buildings, including amenity societies and local interest groups.

English Heritage undertook a security review in 2000 which looked into the implications of placing photographs of private buildings on the internet. The review consulted with the police, insurers and technical experts and concluded that no evidence could be found to support a link between the kind of information English Heritage is publishing on the internet and any physical threats to property security.

Television Licensing

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of eligible people were in receipt of a free television licence in the last year for which figures are available. [103048]

Dr. Howells: In 2001–02, an estimated 95 per cent. of the eligible population were in receipt of a free television licence.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she intends to publish the draft guidance on licensing authorities' statement of policy that will be required under the new licensing bill. [102650]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 14 March 2003]: The Department published a rough draft of the guidance to local authorities and the police that will accompany the Licensing Bill on 13 February. Section 4 of this rough draft provides guidance to local authorities on the development and preparation of local statements of licensing policy, the general principles that should underpin them, and core content to which licensing authorities would be free to add. The draft guidance was placed in the Libraries of both Houses and is available on the Department's website: www.culture.gov.uk.

Regional Museums

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress her Department has made in implementing the recommendations on making regional museums sustainable in the report "Renaissance in the Regions". [102857]

Dr. Howells: We will be providing £70 million for regional museums from this year until 2005–06. Resource: The Council for Museums, Archives and Libraries will put their recommendations to Ministers on funding allocations for all nine regional hubs ready for announcement in April. All regional hubs will then be asked to submit a detailed business plan by January 2004, setting out their programme of work for 2004–06.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Pensions

Miss McIntosh: To ask the President of the Council if he will make a statement about the Lord Chancellor's pension arrangements. [102849]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Lord Chancellor's pension arrangements are set out in the Lord Chancellor's Pension Act 1832 and the Parliamentary and other Pensions Act 1972 as amended by the Ministerial and other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991. The Judicial Pensions Act 1981 additionally makes provision for lump sum benefits and for pensions for dependants.

The Lord Chancellor's pension is based on his salary at the time of leaving office. At present, this salary is linked to that of the Lord Chief Justice, but the Senior Salaries Review Body has been asked to review the remuneration of the office of Lord Chancellor.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by the Department; what their scope was; when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102061]

Ms Hewitt: The Department of Trade and Industry promotes the following awards:

BAFTA Interactive Awards

DTI has, in the past two years, sponsored categories at the annual BAFTA Interactive Awards. These awards recognise and reward creative talent in interactive media. In 2001. DTI sponsored the category for the BAFTA Award for Online Game and in 2002, sponsored the BAFTA Award for Console Game.

The Department has also sponsored awards at smaller trade association events over the past two years. For example, the International Visual Communications Association (IVCA) Awards and the British Interactive Media Association Awards, as well as the Best use of Broadband Award at the annual BizNet Awards run by the IVCA.

The British Computer Society Awards

The DTI has, for the last 10 years, sponsored the British Computer Society (BCS) awards. The BCS Annual IT awards recognise both IT excellence and benefit to business and society. The awards are open to any project developed in the field of IT in the UK, and participating organisations who make the final are notified some two to three weeks in advance of the awards ceremony. The overall winners are then announced at the annual awards ceremony. The 38,000 members of the BCS are notified of the entrants, finalists and winners and there is coverage in the press and IT journals.

The Castle Award

The DTI run the Castle Award scheme for employers who have made significant progress in bridging the pay gap between the sexes. The award, in the form of a trophy, was given for the first time in December last year. The next presentation will take place this year in December.

e-Commerce Awards

The DTI, though UK online for business, is a sponsor of the annual e-Commerce Awards run by Interforum over recent years. The Awards celebrate innovative business uses of Information and Communications Technology.

Nominations and applications begin in the spring each year. National coverage is achieved through regional awards that lead to a national award event in the autumn when category winners are publicly announced—all competitors attend that event to hear the results. Web and local media coverage has been enhanced by sponsorship from the Daily Express (2001 and 2002) and the Sunday Times Enterprise Network (2003).

Employer of the Year 2001

The DTI co-sponsored an award for Employer of the Year 2001 (together with the charity Parents at Work and Lloyds TSB). This award "recognised employers who help their employees juggle their work and home life". The awards covered the UK as well as separate categories for regions and nations; there were separate awards for small, medium and large employers. Winners were announced on 28 November 2001.

ITBeat Competition

ITBeat is a competition designed for girls 11–16 years of age to engage them in information technology. The intention behind the competition is to help overcome the often negative perceptions of IT which deter many girls from pursuing the subject in education or as a potential career path. More details can be found at www.itbeat.com.

ITBeat is managed by e-Skills UK, the former national training organisation for IT and telecoms. The DTI has provided a £40,000 contribution to the costs of running ITBeat. The rest of the costs were to be met by industry sponsorship. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry helped to launch ITBeat in November 2002 through a contribution to the launch press notice.

In total 852 girls registered for the competition, with 300 finalists being invited to attend the event. The finalists come from around the country including Yorkshire, Lancashire, Suffolk, Wales and Scotland. The event took place on 7 March at the Science Museum.

Metrology for world class manufacturing

In 2001 the DTI sponsored Measurement awards within "Metrology for world class manufacturing", with the themes:

Frontier Science and Measurement

Innovative Metrology

Measurement for Manufacturing Excellence

Champions of Metrology

Materials Measurement

These awards were made to the winning participants at the September 2001 award ceremony and also made public in that year. There were no awards made within 2002.

The Queen's Award for Enterprise

The DTI supports the Queen's Awards for Enterprise. The Queens Awards is an interdepartmental scheme and the responsible minister is the Prime Minister, advised by an Advisory Committee chaired by the Head of the Home Civil Service. The Queen's Awards were instituted by Royal Warrant in 1965, as "The Queen's Awards to Industry". All organisations—large, medium or small—which operate regularly as a 'business unit' of the UK economy, and which can meet the criteria, are eligible to apply; they do not need to be sponsored or nominated and usually apply on their own behalf.

The Queen's Award has three separate categories: International Trade, which recognises and rewards not only export earnings but any return on overseas investment; Innovation, which covers marketing, sales and support associated with technological innovation; and Sustainable Development, which spans environmental, social, and economic sustainability. The common theme across all three categories is that successful applicants must be able to demonstrate commercial success.

Successful applicants are notified in March to allow the media to prepare publicity, under embargo, ahead of the public announcement on 21 April; The Queen's personal birthday. In early April, all unsuccessful applicants receive feedback on the assessment of their applications. The names of all the winners are published in a supplement to the London Gazette, they appear on The Queen's Awards website (www.queensawards.org.uk), and are listed in special supplements in The Times, Financial Times, and other broadsheet newspapers.

Following the announcement, in April, winners are usually invited to a celebratory reception, attended by a member of the Royal family, to mark their success. Later in the year, winners are invited to send three representatives to a reception given by HM The Queen at Buckingham Palace. There is also a formal presentation ceremony, usually during the summer, at the winners' premises by the Lord-Lieutenant of the County as The Queen's representative. All of these events help to generate national and regional coverage. The Awards consist of a Grant of Appointment and a presentational crystal bowl engraved with the Award Emblem.

The Rosalind Franklin Award

The DTI is promoting the Rosalind Franklin Award competition, which was announced last year by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to recognise the contribution of Rosalind Franklin to 20th century science. The Secretary of State officially launched the competition on 13 September 2002. It is being run by the Royal Society and encompasses all areas of science, engineering and technology. The Award consists of a medal and a cash award of £30,000 to be spent by the recipient on equipment, study tours or other research related activities. The winner of the first Award will be announced in the early part of 2003.

The competition is open to both men and women who achieve excellence in their field. Therefore, the Award will help further the aims of the Department in:

Increasing the participation of women in SET

Improving the overall international ranking of the UK's science and engineering base

STEP Solutions: Best Electronic Engineer (BEE) Awards 2002

The DTI, in conjunction with STEP (Shell Technology Enterprise Programme) promoted the competition for the Best Electronic Engineer, 2002. The BEE final was in three key stages:

agencies who had arranged electronic engineering projects nominated one candidate for consideration;

Ten candidates were selected to present their achievements at an event in Newcastle on 10 October;

Five students were selected to run an exhibition at the UK final at Church House, one of which was awarded the BEE prize.

The cost of the Newcastle Final and the UK Final exhibition was £6,000. New Electronics sponsored the BEE prize of £1,000 and gave extensive coverage to the events in its Campus Edition. DTI tied in the events to the Department's overall promotion strategies, including the launch of the Accesstoknowledge website (www.accesstoknowledge.co.uk).

Sunday Times 50 Best Companies to Work for 2001 and the Sunday Times 100 Best Companies to Work for 2002

DTI supports the research for this annual list and allocated £370,000 over three years in 1999. The DTI renewed its funding for the research for the 2003 list and is exploring options for 2004.

All organisations employing over 250 employees are eligible and, depending on size, approximately 10 per cent. of the work force will be surveyed. Results are announced at the Gala Winner Event hosted in February or March and a press release is produced post event, with a colour supplement circulated in the Sunday Times following the event.

Young Electronics Designer Awards (YEDA).

YEDA is aimed at young people between the ages of 12–25, at school, college or university. Students are invited to design and develop a commercially viable electronics-based device or system for use in an everyday context. Entries are judged on originality, satisfying a genuine need and market and manufacturing potential.

The proposed targets for this year's competition as a result of DTI support is expected to be:

3,500 schools registering

500 projects entered

750 students participating (23 per cent. girls)

350 projects qualifying for regional awards finals

The DTI has supported YEDA financially for three years, support for YEDA 2001 amounted to £30,000, for YEDA 2002 amounted to £36,500, for 2003 contributing £25,000.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) financial and (b) other assistance was given by the UK Government between 1980 and 1990 for the construction of the Falluja 2 chemical plant in Iraq; and if she will make a statement. [102434]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 12 March 2003]: In 1985 the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) provided export credit insurance in support of a £15 million contract by UHDE Ltd., a UK subsidiary of a West German company, for the design supply and supervision of the erection and commissioning of a Chlorine-Alkali-Electrolysis plant at Falluja, Iraq.

This contract was fully investigated in the 1996 report on the inquiry into the export of defence equipment and dual-use goods to Iraq and related prosecutions by the then Sir Richard Scott (now Lord Scott of Foscote) which concluded that "a unilateral ban by the UK on the export of such plant or chemicals to Iraq would have achieved nothing useful".

Information for 1997–98 was included in the 1999 list. The overall cost of Minister's visits for the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 was most recently provided with the 2001 list. The information for 2002–03 will be published as soon as possible after the end of the financial year.

Detailed information requested in respect of UK travel is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

All travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Perchloroethylene

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to phase out the use of perchloroethylene by businesses and industries, with particular reference to dry cleaners. [99209]

Alun Michael: I have been asked to reply.

A risk assessment of perchloroethylene (tetrachloroethylene), conducted under the Existing Substances Regulation (European Community Council Regulation No. 793/93) is being led by the United Kingdom. The Health and Safety Executive acts jointly with my Department to form the United Kingdom Competent Authority for these activities. The risk assessment will critically evaluate the risks to the environment, workers, consumers and the general public from exposure to perchloroethylene. The risk assessment includes exposure as a result of dry cleaning operations.

At present, the human health sections of the draft report are being updated to take account of new information. Once the risk assessment is finalised, the United Kingdom Competent Authority will consider whether further measures beyond those currently in place are required to control exposure to perchloroethylene. Proposals for marketing and use restrictions are one of a number of further measures that can be considered under the Existing Substances Regulation.

The Solvents Emissions Directive (1999/13/EC) places limits on emissions of solvents used in a number of processes, including dry cleaning. It also sets timetables for the replacement by less harmful substances of those solvents used in these processes that have been assigned to a risk phrase of R45, R46, R49, R60, or R61. The Directive has already been partly transposed. I expect to begin consultations soon on how the remaining parts of this Directive will be transposed, including the provisions applying to the dry cleaning sector.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many post office robberies have been committed since 1997 where the post master's hatch has been open; and what advice has been given to the Post Office by (a) the police and (b) the Department on the security of the hatches in sub post offices; [103099]

(2) how many sub post masters have been disciplined for contributory negligence in relation to robberies since 1997; [103097]

(3) what concerns have been expressed by unions about the design of safety doors and hatches in sub post offices; and what advice has been given to the Post Office since 1980 on possible design faults in sub post office hatches and doors. [103098]

Mr. Timms: These are matters that fall within the day-to-day responsibility of Post Office Ltd. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

Aberporth Airfield

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents have occurred in each year since 1990 of private pilots intruding into the range area at Aberporth Airfield while the range was active and being used on behalf of the MOD. [102825]

Dr. Moonie: The following table sets out the number of incidents that have occurred since 1990 of private pilots intruding into the Aberporth Range danger area while the range was active and being used for Ministry of Defence trials.

Year	Number of incidents
1991	1
1992	5
1993	3
1994	5
1995	8
1996	5
1997	1
1998	5
1999	2
2000	5
2001	5
2002	3

Appropriate safety measures were put into action and worked satisfactorily in each case.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safety measures are in place at Aberporth Airfield to ensure that private pilots do not intrude on the range area while it is being used on behalf of the MOD; and if he will make a statement. [102826]

Dr. Moonie: All trials at Aberporth Range are carried out under radar surveillance from fully qualified air traffic controllers. In the event of an infringement which could potentially compromise safety, the trial would be stopped until the incident was resolved. Any such infringements are reported to the regulatory authority for review. In addition, there are arrangements, agreed between the Aberporth Range and the nearby West Wales Airport, which set out the procedures to be used by both parties concerning operations at and around the range.

Animal Experiments

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlay his recent conclusion that the information which could be derived from an analysis of the actual effect of wounds to humans required to be supplemented with animal experiments inflicting wounds on animals. [100404]

Dr. Moonie: It is unclear as to the recent conclusion that the hon. Member refers.

However, I will address the necessity to supplement the analysis of the effects of human wounds with vital information gained from scientific research involving the use of animals, which is undertaken at Dstl Porton Down.

The analysis of the actual effects of wounds to humans is one important facet of developing improved procedures for the medical management of the injured. Studies involving animals enable rational, objective and evidence-based medical management strategies to be developed, which can proceed into clinical trials if appropriate.

Research involving the use of animals is undertaken only if absolutely necessary. Additionally, we are continuing to invest in the development of alternatives to the use of animals for the development of medical management strategies for injury and disease caused by conventional, chemical and biological weapons.

Anti-personnel Mines

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is the intention of the US to bring anti-personnel mines ashore onto Diego Garcia in order for them to be used in any attack on Iraq. [102350]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

The US authorities have been informed that HMG would be unable to allow the US to bring anti-personnel land mines ashore onto Diego Garcia because that would place the United Kingdom in breach of its obligations under the Ottawa Convention.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the US Government concerning (a) the basing at Diego Garcia of US Navy vessels carrying anti-personnel mines and (b) the possible use in a conflict with Iraq of anti-personnel mines by US military using stocks held in vessels at or near Diego Garcia. [102353]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

HMG has received no representations from the US Government concerning either the basing at Diego Garcia of US vessels carrying anti-personnel mines or the use of any such mines in a conflict with Iraq.

Defence Medical Services

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Defence Medical Services are available for operational duty within the United Kingdom. [82157]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 21 November 2003]: As of July 2002, there were 6,489 regular personnel in the Defence Medical Services (DMS) excluding student nurses and other new entry trainees. Of these, at any one time some will be unavailable for operational duty within the United Kingdom as a result of medical downgrading. As of November 2002, the latest date for which figures are available, 131 were unavailable for such duty as a result of medical downgrading. In practice, the number of DMS personnel available for operational duty in the United Kingdom will depend on other commitments including deployment on overseas operations, training and exercises, and retained tasks.

Mr. Ingram: 25,000 pairs of desert goggles have been ordered to meet the requirements of troops deployed to Kuwait with 21,380 pairs having so far been issued. Sufficient stocks of the full desert ensemble have been ordered to meet requirements.

Iraq

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) British field hospitals and (b) other British medical facilities will be established in the Gulf in the event of conflict in Iraq. [102374]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 11 March 2003]: There has been no decision to take military action against Iraq. However, in the event of conflict, there are currently two British Field Hospitals in the Gulf and this will shortly increase to three. These will be supported by a range of medical facilities in the region, including a primary casualty receiving facility, the RFA Argus and The Princess Mary's Hospital in Cyprus.

Land Sales (Ashford)

Matthew Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 24 February 2003, Official Report, columns 138–39W, on Land Sales (Ashford), when each sale took place; what area of land was sold; who the land was sold to; and how much the land was sold for in each case. [102658]

Dr. Moonie: Oil Pipeline Agency Wye was sold to Folkestone Development Company Limited on 21 November 2001. The price paid was £605,000 plus clawback on receipt of a planning consent. The land measured 7.3acres/2.954 hectares.

The A20/A28 link road land, which was part of Ashford barracks, was sold on 28 July 1998 to Kent County Council. The price paid was a nominal sum plus the right to construct a roundabout to open up Ashford barracks for improved development. The area measured 5.48 acres/2.219 hectares.

The land in Ashford barracks that was needed for the channel tunnel rail link was transferred to Union Rail. Payment of £1.4 million compensation has been received. The "sale" was deemed to be completed in 1998 when the site was handed over to Union Rail and the site measured 30 acres/12 hectares.

The remainder of Ashford barracks was sold to a house builder consortium of Westbury Homes/Wimpy in April 2002. The price was £17 million plus potential clawback. The site area was 95.13 acres/38.5 hectares.

Low Flying

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints regarding low flying have been received from residents of Dumfries and Galloway in each of the last six months. [103049]

Dr. Moonie: During the period 1 September 2002—28 February 2003, a total of 40 complaints were received from residents of Dumfries and Galloway by the Ministry of Defence. Of these, 22 were from members of the public who complained on more than one occasion during this period. Broken down on a monthly basis, the figures are as follows:

Month	Complaints
September 2002	11
October 2002	16
November 2002	2
December 2002	6
January 2003	3
February 2003	2

MOD Ranges (Security)

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on minimum standards of security for part-time MOD ranges. [103050]

Dr. Moonie: In general, security at Ministry of Defence (MOD) ranges is provided in accordance with their use and purpose, taking account of the prevailing threat assessment. When ranges are temporarily in use by military personnel, the standards for security of personnel and their equipment, is the same as those which apply at permanent MOD establishments and sites. Some ranges, for example the one at West Freugh, are MOD owned but managed by QinetiQ, a commercial company. Security at these sites is the responsibility of the contractor, and is normally implemented by a civilian guard force, supported by the local constabulary. As a commercial company, QinetiQ complies with Government-wide security regulations issued by the Cabinet Office, rather than with MOD security procedures. MOD reserves the right, however, to take such additional measures as we consider necessary to protect our Service personnel and materiel when making use of these ranges.

I am withholding details of security measures implemented within the MOD, under Exemption 1 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

NBC Suits

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the respirators on NBC suits issued to UK servicemen in the Gulf have been checked for effectiveness; and if he will make a statement. [103017]

Mr. Ingram: All NBC respirators issued to service personnel are periodically tested during training in a Hazardous Environment Chamber to ensure they function correctly and are the correct size for the individual concerned. A new Respirator Test System is being delivered into service. It allows respirators—including those issued to deployed personnel—to be tested to an even higher standard.

Operational Welfare Package

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for (a) mail and (b) parcel deliveries for troops in Kuwait; and what arrangements have been made for (a) telephone and (b) email availability for these troops. [102697]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 March 2003]: All elements of the Operational Welfare Package (OWP) listed by the hon. Member are provided to all United Kingdom military personnel already deployed to the Gulf in support of Operations RESINATE and ORACLE. We are building up the OWP as quickly as possible for UK military personnel deploying overseas in preparation for possible operations against Iraq.

QinetiQ

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proposed sale by QinetiQ of Longcross Tanklands to Crest and Mowlem Ltd. [101653]

Dr. Moonie: We understand that Longcross Tanklands is an informal local term used to describe a former test track, which forms part of what the Ministry of Defence and QinetiQ know as the Chertsey South site. The freehold of the Chertsey site was transferred to QinetiQ when the company was vested as a Plc in July 2001 and is scheduled for disposal. Negotiations are currently underway with potential purchasers.

Under the terms of the deal signed with The Carlyle Group to acquire a stake in QinetiQ, the Chertsey site forms security against an outstanding loan note from QinetiQ to MOD. QinetiQ will receive no proceeds from the sale of the site until the loan note is repaid in full.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the financial contracts entered into by his Department since 1 January 2002 where QinetiQ have acted as advisors to the Government. [102483]

Dr. Moonie: The Department places a large number of contracts each year with QinetiQ—in excess of 1,000 in calendar year 2002. These contracts typically cover a number of tasks, which may include the provision of impartial specialist technical and scientific advice, conducting independent research and the supply of testing and evaluation services. There is no centrally held list identifying all the specific instances in which QinetiQ has acted as advisers and such information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Recruitment and Retention

Mr. Paul Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what methods are used by the Ministry of Defence to forecast (a) social trends and (b) risks in relation to (i) recruitment and (ii) retention; and if he will make a statement. [100173]

Dr. Moonie: The armed forces employ a number of methods to identify and assess factors—including social trends and risks—that impact on recruitment and retention. The Department has its own analytical capability situated in the Defence Analytical and Services Agency, where much of this groundwork is undertaken. Social trends are identified primarily through commissioned research. This provides access to a wide range of research information across Government Departments, for example labour trends, demography, and census statistics. Targeted research contracts are also placed, as necessary, to improve our understanding of the employment market in which we compete. Recruiting risks are identified from this research and from very close scrutiny of the emerging performance of the recruiting machine.

As far as retention is concerned, a key part of the pay and workforce strategy for the armed forces is the identification of high level risks and the levers that can be used to ameliorate those risks. Within that strategy, underpinning policies are reviewed in the light of evidence obtained both from routine surveys (for example Continuous Attitude Surveys) and from discrete research on specific topics.

Security Vetting

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what security vetting is carried out on consultants employed by MoD. [102549]

Dr. Moonie: Consultants employed by the Ministry of Defence to work with protectively marked information or materials, or who will require access to Defence facilities, are security cleared in accordance with the Government's vetting policy. The level of security clearance will depend on the nature of the work involved, as judged by the sponsor.

Wage Bill

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what financial savings were made to the overall wage bill between 1 April 2001 and 1 April 2002 due to the introduction of Pay 2000 for soldiers, sailors and airmen; and if he will make a statement; [102612]

(2) what the projected savings are in the period 1 April 2001 to 1 April 2010 in the wage bill due to the introduction of Pay 2000 for soldiers, sailors and airmen; and if he will make a statement. [102610]

Dr. Moonie: There are no actual or projected savings for the period 1 April 2001 to 1 April 2010 in the wage bill of the armed forces as a result of the introduction of Pay 2000 for Service personnel. Pay 2000 was introduced in April 2001 to provide a more responsive pay system for the needs of Service personnel—up to and including one-star level—serving in the 21st century. It was not intended to be a cost saving measure.

TRANSPORT

Congestion Charging

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the London congestion charge on economic activity in London; and if he will make a statement. [101907]

Mr. Jamieson: The Mayor and Transport for London (TfL) will monitor the scheme's effects, including its impact on business and the economy, and the Department will consider fully the results of this work.

Airports

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what implications the inclusion in his re-issued airport consultation document of possible expansion of Gatwick airport has for prospective levels of demand for civil aviation services out of Birmingham airport. [102899]

Mr. Jamieson: It is the number of runways in the south east of England, rather than their location, which significantly affects the levels of demand at Birmingham International Airport.

Therefore, the inclusion of Gatwick options in the on-going consultation does not alter the forecast levels of demand for Birmingham.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he plans to issue to residents of the Midlands region on the account they should take of his re-issued airports consultation document for the south east in returning their revised questionnaires in respect of airports in the midlands. [102898]

Mr. Jamieson: We are writing to all consultees previously contacted directly, and those who have submitted responses, to inform them of minor revisions to the midlands consultation paper. The sole revision to the midlands questionnaire is the addition of 'Gatwick airport' to question 4(b).

All responses received so far will continue to be regarded as responses to the consultation. Respondents have the option to add to, replace or amend their responses, if they wish to.

Automated Traffic Management

Mr. David Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in establishing the proposed automated traffic management system for the west midlands motorways (a) M5, (b) M6, (c) M40, (d) M42 and (e) M54. [102855]

Mr. Jamieson: The west midlands area multi modal-study, which is currently being considered by the Secretary of State, recommends the use of active traffic management (ATM) on the west midlands motorway box (M42 junctions 1–7, M5 junctions 1–4A and M6 junctions 4–10A) as part of the overall strategy. I refer to the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport, on 27 July 2001 that junctions 3A to 7 of the M42 have been chosen as a trial site for active traffic management (ATM). The outcome of the trial will be assessed very thoroughly before any decision is taken about application to other motorway links on the west midlands motorway box.

Bus Services

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus services were operated from (a) Tadcaster and (b) Selby on the most recent date for which figures are available. [103139]

Mr. Jamieson: On Thursday 13 March 2003 104 bus services were scheduled to operate from Tadcaster and 176 from Selby.

Car Number Plate Reader Project

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's automatic number plate reader project. [102787]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA currently has 11 automatic number plate reader vans in operation across the UK, with a further four becoming available by mid 2003. They form part of the Agency's deterrent to combat vehicle excise duty (VED) evasion and were first introduced on a phased basis in October 2001.

The vans are continually involved in joint police/DVLA VED enforcement campaigns. They attract useful media coverage and receive positive support from the motoring public.

Over the last year the automatic number plate readers have provided DVLA with 30,000 VED offence reports.

Departmental Spending

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his latest estimate is of the spending funded by his Department and its predecessors on (a) railways, (b) trunk roads (maintenance), (c) trunk roads (new build), (d) local roads, (e) London Transport, (f) aviation and (g) buses, in each year from 1990–91 (planned) to 2005–06 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [101638]

Mr. Jamieson: Information on these programmes between 1990–91 and 2003–04 is set out in the relevant expenditure tables of the annual departmental reports for the Department of Transport, the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions, and the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions, although not on a comparable basis across the entire period. Updated information for the Department for Transport, with plans to 2005–06, will be published in the 2003 departmental report shortly.

Hydraulic Tail Lifts

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it a requirement (a) that vehicles with hydraulic tail lifts should clearly display the weight of such lifts and (b) that notices should be displayed on vehicles warning that the weight of such lifts has to be included in the calculation for the legal permitted weight load capacity; and if he will make a statement. [103091]

Mr. Jamieson: The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 require that the maximum weight that a vehicle can operate at is to be displayed on a plate fixed to it. This weight will include that of any equipment fitted to the vehicle and load carried on it. The Lifting Operations and Lifting Equipment Regulations 1998 require all lifting equipment and lifting accessories to be marked with a safe working load. Tail lifts do not normally carry any load while the vehicle is travelling on a road.

London Underground

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the main problems are which the shadow running of the London Underground PPP has highlighted; and if he will make a statement. [101320]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government understand that London Underground Ltd. has made some limited changes to the contracts, including in respect of performance management and the way access is granted to the infrastructure, as a result of shadow running.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 10 March, ref 101751, what indirect role the Government have played in assisting London Underground PPP consortia to obtain (a) grants and (b) loans from (i) the European Investment bank and (ii) other financial institutions; and if he will make a statement. [102816]

Mr. Jamieson: As I said in my earlier reply, the method by which the consortia finance their obligations under the PPP, and how they raise the necessary funding, is a matter for them.

The minutes that my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions presented to Parliament on 20 March last year and that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport made to Parliament on 4 December drew Parliament's attention to certain letters to be issued and steps to be taken in order to enable the PPP contracts to proceed. Factual explanations of the matters set out in the letters have been given to some financial institutions, including the EIB, in response to requests.

M60 (Compensation)

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether all the compensation to householders resulting from the construction of the M60 has been paid; what steps are in place to reduce the fees for agents involved in these pay outs; and whether claimants will be paid interest on late pay outs. [102642]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Andrew Bennett, dated 17 March 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if all the compensation to householders resulting from the construction of the M60 had been paid; if there are any steps in place to reduce fees for agents and if claimants are being paid interest for late pay outs.

I believe that you are referring primarily to compensation under Part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973 (as amended). Such claims, for the depreciation in the value of property arising from the use of a new or altered highway, can be made for a period of 6 years from the first claim date which falls 12 months after the road is opened to traffic. In the case of the M60 Manchester Outer Ring Road construction was undertaken in four contracts, resulting in a variety of claim periods.

The main body of construction work (Contracts 1& 3) led to the road being opened on 30 October 2000 and a first claim date of 30 October 2001. We have received over 14,000 claims to date and continue to receive them at the rate of approximately 300 per month Around 1,000 claims have been settled so far. On Contract 4, for which the claim period closed last month, we have 22 cases awaiting settlement. Another 322 cases remain unsettled on Contract 2, for which the claim period remains open until December 2004. In all cases interest, calculated from the date the claim is received (or the first claim date, if later) until the date that compensation is paid, is added to the compensation.

In addition to Part I compensation, we have also compensated people for the acquisition of land and property in connection with the construction of the road. Around 200 such cases have yet to be finalised. In these types of cases interest, calculated from the date of entry on to the land until the date that compensation is paid, is added to the compensation.

Following the abolition of the non statutory Ryde's Scale, which fixed surveyors fees in proportion to the level of compensation paid, claimants' surveyors must now demonstrate that the fees proposed have been properly incurred, are reasonable and proportionate to both the compensation at stake and the complexity of the claim, and commensurate with the time, effort and expertise required to deal with the case.

Railways

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on the Central Railway Project. [103060]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 11 March, Official Report, column 120W.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the credit rating is of Network Rail. [101196]

Mr. Jamieson: Network Rail expects to secure ratings later this year.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when safety liaison meetings between ASLEF, management and other partners took place in each of the last five years; and what the normal frequency of such meetings should be. [102395]

Mr. Jamieson: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) advise that meetings between managers, safety representatives and trade union representatives are important in ensuring the discharge of the legal duty under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 requiring employers to provide such information, instruction, training and supervision as is necessary to ensure the health and safety of their employees. HSE however do not hold details of the dates of such meetings.

Senior management of the HSE Railway Inspectorate (HMRI) hold regular meetings with the general secretaries of all the principal rail unions to discuss issues of strategic safety importance. These meetings are held 2–3 times a year. These high level meetings are complemented by a wide range of local liaison initiatives with ASLEF officials and Trade Union members, including regular local meetings between HMRI inspectors and trade union officials. Details of local liaison meetings are not held centrally.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with LUL about the restoration of services on the (a) Waterloo and City line and (b) Central line. [102396]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend and ministerial colleagues meet London Underground representatives on both a regular and ad hoc basis, to discuss a variety of relevant matters.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the (a) Trans-Pennine rail franchise and (b) Northern franchise. [103137]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority is replacing the existing First North Western and Arriva Trains Northern franchises by reconfigured TransPennine Express and Northern franchises. Connex Transport UK Limited and a consortium of FirstGroup and Keolis SDA have been short-listed as bidders for the TransPennine Express franchise. Expressions of interest have been invited for the Northern franchise and the firms pre-qualified to receive invitations to tender will be announced later this year.

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Strategic Rail Authority plans to take regarding Virgin Trains' recent announcement on changes to the timetable in services in Gloucester; and whether this is in breach of the passenger service requirements. [103345]

Mr. Jamieson: The increased timetable which Virgin Cross Country introduced in October 2002 has proved to be unworkable in various respects. The Strategic Rail Authority has agreed timetable changes, including changes affecting Gloucester, and is granting the necessary derogations from the passenger service requirements. The aim is to improve the performance and reliability of services overall. At Gloucester the withdrawal of Virgin Cross Country services (save for one morning and one evening peak service to Birmingham) will be offset by a new, more reliable pattern of services operated variously by Central Trains, Wessex Trains and Wales and Borders.

Road Building

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his estimate is of the total cost to the Government of all central Government funded new road building in each year from 2001–02 to 2010–11; and if he will make a statement. [101532]

Mr. Jamieson: The 10-Year Plan for Transport provided for investment of £15 billion over 10 years for roads in England. This investment is for new roads and the improvement of existing roads through widening and junction improvements. It is funded directly and indirectly by central government through the Highways Agency, local authorities and makes use of private finance.

A year by year breakdown is as follows:

Investment in new roads

£ million

	Public	Private
2001–02	714	73
2002–03	1,005	73
2003–04	1,001	62
2004–05	1,332	150
2005–06	1,084	325
2006–07	1,217	425
2007–08	1,366	400
2008–09	1,693	300
2009–10	1,778	200
2010–11	1,825	200
Total	13,015	2,208

Actual expenditure will depend upon the schemes that come forward as well as the planning process.

Roads in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the devolved Administrations.

Road Safety (Traffic Counters)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the road safety implications of the use of Nu-Metrics Hi-Star traffic counters installed in road surfaces. [102838]

Mr. Jamieson: The British Motorcyclists Federation has written to my Department expressing concern for the safety of powered two wheel vehicles passing over this device, asking in particular whether it needed "type approval". My officials have met the importers of the device. Having examined a sample, they consider that it does not require type approval. It is for the relevant highway authority to consider whether and how such counters should be used on their roads.

Vehicle Emmissions

Dr. Andrew Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Road Traffic (Vehicle Emissions) (Fixed Penalty) (England) Regulations 2002; [103552]

(2) how many fixed penalty notices have been issued under the Road Traffic (Vehicle Emissions) (Fixed Penalty) (England) Regulations 2002. [103553]

Mr. Jamieson: It is too early to determine the effectiveness of these regulations. However we will review them in July 2004, after which I will report our conclusions to the House.

We do not keep records of fixed penalties that have been issued. However I understand that none has been issued under these regulations for idling engine offences and only five for illegal emissions offences. The intention of the regulations was that the fixed penalties should provide a deterrent.

TREASURY

Al-Qaeda

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funds belonging to al-Qaeda network have been frozen since September 2001. [102690]

Ruth Kelly: As I indicated in my written answer of 18 February 2003, Official Report, column 184W, to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk), more than £10 million has been frozen by UK financial institutions since 11 September 2001 under Orders applying United Nations Security Council Resolutions 1267 and 1390. Funds used by the Taliban have since been made available to the legitimate Government of Afghanistan. However the al-Qaeda and Taliban (United Nations Measures) Order provides for the continued freezing of accounts belonging to al-Qaeda. UK financial institutions indicate that amounts totalling £337,900 remain frozen under that Order.

Charities (VAT)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce VAT recovery relief for charities. [103554]

John Healey: Charities benefit from special VAT zero rates and exemptions worth around £200 million a year. However, long-standing formal agreements with our European partners mean there is no scope to extend the range of these reliefs or introduce any new ones.

The Government recognise the valuable contribution that voluntary groups and charities make in delivering services, and realise that the question of irrecoverable VAT provides difficulties for some charities. The Review of Charity Taxation looked carefully at the problem of irrecoverable VAT and concluded, for reasons of principle and affordability that no changes should be made. In response to representations during the recent Cross-Cutting Review of the Role of the Voluntary and Community Sector in Service Delivery, the Government considered the issue afresh to determine once and for all whether the obstacles presented by irrecoverable VAT could be overcome. Having considered all the options available, including a targeted compensation fund, the Government concluded that no fundamental change should be made to the way the VAT system operates and the available resources would be better deployed through the new investment fund, 'futurebuilders'. This is a one-off £125 million investment, over the three years of the 2002 Spending Review, specifically to assist voluntary and community sector service-providing organisations in their public service work. The Treasury is leading on the design of 'futurebuilders' in close co-operation with the voluntary and community sector, and the Government intend to conduct wide consultation between April and June this year.

Earnings

Mr. Adrian Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the percentage of the workforce earning below (a) £75, (b) £100, (c) £120, (d) £150, (e) £175, (f) £200, (g) £225, (h) £250, (i) £275, (j) £300, (k) £325, (l) £350, (m) £375 and (n) £400 per week within each parliamentary constituency. [100398]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr Adrian Sand[illegible] dated 17 March 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the percentage of the workforce earning below various levels within each parliamentary constituency.

I am placing the requested information in the House of Commons Library. The tables provided show the proportion of people earning below the different thresholds you listed. Some of the data requested have been suppressed in the answer. This is because the New Earnings Survey (NES) has not been designed to provide estimates at this very detailed level.

The NES can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. The release of NES data is restricted to figures that are derived from a sufficiently large sample of employees, and have an acceptable level of accuracy. I have provided the available data only for the constituencies where the samples are large enough. These are based on the 2002 NES, the latest survey for which data are available.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of full-time workers in (a) Scotland, (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland and (c) Great Britain have hourly earnings gross pay (i) including and (ii) excluding overtime below (A) £7.97, (B) £7.32, (C) £5.38 and (D) £4.10 for the categories (1) male manual, (2) male non-manual, (3) all male workers, (4) female manual, (5) female non-manual, (6) all female workers, (7) all manual, (8) non-manual and (9) all workers. [99977]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 3 March 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Annabelle Ewing dated 17 March 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the distribution of average hourly earnings for workers in Great Britain, Scotland and the unitary authorities in Scotland. (99977)

I am placing the requested information in the House of Commons Library. The tables provided show the proportion of people earning below the different thresholds you listed, both including overtime (Table 1) and excluding overtime (Table 2). Some of the data requested have been suppressed in the answer. This is because the New Earnings Survey (NES) has not been designed to provide estimates at this very detailed level.

The NES can provide earnings data for small geographical areas. These are based on the 2002 NES, the latest survey for which data are available.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for (a) Scotland and (b) each of the unitary local authority areas in Scotland (i) weekly median earnings and (ii) the per cent. distribution of earnings for those earning (A) under the point below which 10 per cent. of earners fall and (B) the point above which 10 per cent. of earners exceed, broken down by the categories (1) all manual, (2) all non-manual, (3) all workers, (4) male manual, (5) male non-manual, (6) all male workers, (7) female manual, (8) female non-manual and (9) all female workers. [99978]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 3 March 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Annabelle Ewing dated 17 March 2003:

I am placing the requested information in the House of Commons Library. Some of the data requested have been suppressed in the answer. This is because the New Earnings Survey (NES) has not been designed to provide estimates at this very detailed level.

Euro

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 54W, on the euro, when his Department plans to conduct the next survey of small and medium-sized companies; and if he will make a statement. [102891]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave him on 13 January 2003, Official Report, columns 414–15W, 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 54W and 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 29W.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has made or plans to make an assessment of the optimum exchange rate for the United Kingdom to join the euro. [102925]

Ruth Kelly: The Government have consistently made clear that they will complete a comprehensive and rigorous assessment of the five economic tests within two years of the start of this Parliament.

As set out in the paper of 6 September 2002 for the Treasury Committee on the Treasury's approach to the preliminary and technical work, a number of supporting studies will be published alongside the assessment of the five economic tests. A supporting study will be published "Analysing different approaches to the sustainable real exchange rate".

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the level of European economic reform described in the report Meeting the Challenge: Economic Reform in Europe will be taken into consideration when making an assessment of the second test for euro entry. [102929]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 11 March 2003, Official Report, column 126W.

House Price Inflation

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of house price inflation in each year since 1997. [102924]

Ruth Kelly: HM Treasury do not estimate house price inflation. National house price indices are available from the Office for the Deputy Prime Minister, the Nationwide and the Halifax. ODPM: http://www.housing.odpm.gov.uk/statistics/live/index.htmtthm Nationwide: http://www.nationwide.co.uk/hpi/ Halifax: http://www.hbosplc.com/view/housepriceindex/historicaldataspreadsheet.asp

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions officials from his Department have had with representatives of (a) building societies, (b) the estate agent industry and (c) consumer groups on (i) the state of the housing market and (ii) future estimates of house price inflation; and if he will make a statement. [102928]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor regularly meets representatives of a wide range of organisations to discuss important economic issues.

Iraq

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision he has made for the cost of war with Iraq. [103450]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith) on 12 March 2003, Official Report, column 283W.

Personal Income

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) the average gross income and (b) the average annual net disposable income has been for each quintile of the income in distribution in each year since 1996. [102986]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter to David Willetts from Len Cook, dated 17 March 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking for the average annual gross and net household income for each quintile of the income distribution since 1996. (102986)

Estimates for 1996–97 to 2000–01 are shown in the following tables. They are based on the analysis "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income 2000–01", published on the National Statistics (ONS) website on April 19th 2002 and in Economic Trends for May 2002. The analysis and those for earlier years can be obtained from the House of Commons library. They include measures of income inequality for the United Kingdom as a whole based on data from the Family Expenditure Survey.

Estimates are given for all households in the United Kingdom and split by quintile groups ranked by disposable household income. Gross income includes income from employment, investment and cash benefits. Net disposable income is obtained by deducting income tax and national insurance contributions and local taxes. Local taxes include council tax, domestic rates, water and sewerage charges and are net of discounts, benefits and rebates.

Public Sector Pensions

Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public sector pension schemes which are funded; when was the last actuarial valuation of each scheme; what the value was of the assets at the last actuarial valuation of each scheme; and what deficit is disclosed by the last actuarial valuation of each scheme. [103346]

Mr. Boateng: Of the major public service schemes, only the Local Government Pension Scheme is funded. That scheme is the responsibility of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

In addition some of the small public service schemes are funded. In the wider public sector, corporations such as the BBC and the Post Office have their own funded schemes. Responsibility for these schemes rests with the relevant sponsoring department.

Detailed information on the valuations of funded public sector pension schemes is not held centrally.

Recycling

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage recycling initiatives through exemptions for recycling plants from landfill tax. [103140]

John Healey: Landfill tax is a tax on waste, and is applied to all waste disposed of by way of landfill at a licensed landfill site, unless that waste is specifically exempted. Recycling plants are therefore not liable to tax. Indeed, landfill tax is designed to encourage recycling—by making the disposal of waste to landfill more expensive, it encourages waste producers to recover more value from waste, for example through recycling or composting. Landfill tax also contains provisions for tax-free areas on landfill sites to encourage site operators to recycle material sent to their sites for disposal.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when stamp duty on share transactions was reduced from (a) 2 per cent.and (b) 1 per cent. [103626]

Ruth Kelly: The rate of stamp duty on share transactions was reduced from 2 per cent. to 1 per cent. in 1984. At that time the scope of stamp duty was widened to include bearer instruments.

In 1986 the rate was further reduced to 0.5 per cent. which is when Stamp Duty Reserve Tax was enacted. The Finance Act 1986 also introduced a 1.5 per cent. charge for shares entering a clearance service or depository bank.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the financial secretary to the Treasury will reply to the letter of the honourable Member for Taunton which referred to her comments on reduction of stamp duty on share transactions, Official Report, 23 January, column 425. [103627]

Ruth Kelly: I have already done so.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Abducted Children

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will consult parents who have had their children abducted on ways to improve the services provided by her Department in such cases. [102238]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Parents are consulted through our work with reunite—International Child Abduction Centre which works closely with the parents involved. We consult reunite regularly. My Department also receives information from parents through meetings and correspondence from them and hon. Members, which all inform our consideration of service provision. Consultation takes place before Special Commissions of the Hague Conference, as they occur.

Domestic Violence

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will make a statement on the Lord Chancellor's Department's policy on reducing domestic violence. [102182]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government are committed to tackling domestic violence. My Department's main responsibility as a member of the Inter-Ministerial Group on Domestic Violence is to develop co-ordination between the criminal, civil and family courts to make sure that victims of domestic violence and their families have a swift and effective route to protection, and perpetrators of violence are brought to justice. We intend to do this through improving training and raising awareness amongst the professional judiciary and magistrates.

My Department recently launched a guide on civil remedies and criminal sanctions against abusers aimed to assist those who advise victims of their options.

Where necessary we will improve court processes through legislation, as we did with the Adoption and Children Act 2002 (ACA 2002) and the Children Act 1989. As a consequence of the ACS 2002, the application form used to apply for contact or residence will be amended so that the applicant can indicate, and give details about, whether abuse has taken place. The respondent will then also have a chance to comment. This will mean that judges will be aware early in the proceedings; that domestic abuse is alleged and findings of fact can be made before contact or residence are considered.

We have also published guidelines for the courts and other professionals which provide a structured and consistent approach for all court users in how to deal with contact cases where domestic violence is an issue. Their effectiveness is being monitored and evaluated.

A safety stakeholder group was set up to advise on how to improve our handling of domestic violence in proceedings involving children, and promote safe contact. Representatives from the judiciary, academics, practitioners and parents' and children's organisations are involved.

We have carried out a mapping exercise of the provision of child contact services, including centres where supervised contact is available, to help us to develop a national network of child contact centres that work to agreed standards. We are supporting child contact centres on their strategy for expanding and improving their services by putting in extra Government funding [over £1.7 million over the past two years] and an additional £2.5 million from Children's Fund announced in February 2003.

We will be working closely wi;th colleagues in the Home Office and other Departments to take various issues forward through the forthcoming domestic violence consultation paper and proposed subsequent draft bill later in the year.

With the help of our key stakeholder advisory groups we will continue to identify further action in every area of our responsibilities, and in those areas of responsibility that we share with other Government Departments, to make sure that tackling domestic violence and protecting its victims (adults and children) are given the priority they deserve.

Special Advisers

Mr. Cash: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent by the Department on (a) special advisers and (b) external contracts in each year since 1997; if she will name the advisers and contractors; and if she will place copies of the relevant contracts in the Library. [100843]

Ms Rosie Winterton: For information on special advisers, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander), on 31 January 2003, Official Report, column 1056W.

For information on external consultancy expenditure I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (David Davis) on 28 October 2002, Official Report, column 600W and the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 16W.

The Department places very many contracts for a wide range of goods and services including products such as all office furniture, transcription tapes, office supplies and stationary. Services range from the provision of IT, office cleaning, court reporting, postage through to utilities.

Purchasing of such items is generally devolved, so the information requested cannot be readily provided.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of the US Government regarding (a) compensation and (b) other assistance for the Afghan woman, Orfa, whose house in Bibi Mahru was accidentally bombed by a US F-16; on what date he raised the matter with the US; and what response he has received. [102904]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have discussed the case referred to a number of times with the US since it was first reported in the Guardian in October 2002. The US have indicated that they do not pay claims for compensation arising from combat activities. The US have assisted Afghanistan as a whole with development funding on a substantial scale. We are still discussing this matter with the US authorities and I will seek to keep my hon. Friend informed if there are any developments.

Antarctica

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the number of tourists visiting Antarctica in each of the past five years by (a) cruise ship and (b) air, and their environmental impact; and if he will make a statement. [103448]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The International Association of Antarctic Tour Operators (IAATO) presents annually a report on tourism in Antarctica at the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (ATCM). These reports detail tourist visits by cruise ship and air. Scientific monitoring of sites visited by tourists show that there has been no significant impact on the Antarctic environment from tourism.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total UK expenditure on the Antarctic Environmental Protocol Secretariat is for 200–03; and how much is projected for 2003–04. [103449]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no Antarctic Environmental Protocol Secretariat as such. However it was agreed in principle at the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting in 2001 that an Antarctic Treaty Secretariat should be set up. Given that this has yet to be established there has been no UK expenditure to date.

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held with the Governments of (a) Chile, (b) Argentina, (c) South Africa, (d) Australia and (e) New Zealand concerning the funding of the Antarctic Environmental Protocol Secretariat; and if he will make a statement. [103451]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are in regular discussions with the Argentineans regarding the proposed Antarctic Treaty Secretariat to be located in Buenos Aires.Negotiations on setting up the Secretariat, including its funding, continue with the Governments of Chile, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand, as with all other Antarctic Treaty Parties, at annual Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meetings (ATCM). The next of these will be held in Madrid (June 2003). Separately, an informal intersessional meeting is scheduled for 1 to 4 April in Buenos Aires to discuss matters relating to the Treaty Secretariat.

Arms Sales

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the EU code of conduct on arms sales, with reference to sales to Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [101954]

Mr. Rammell: The sale of military listed items and dual use items to Iraq is restricted by sanctions. Those which are not automatically prohibited require approval from the UN Iraq Sanctions Committee, of which we are a member. As a member of the Sanctions Committee our evaluation of any application for permission to export such goods, including applications from EU partners, would involve consideration against the criteria of the Code. We consider the Code to be an effective tool to apply when making such decisions.

Burma

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Burma. [103045]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The human rights situation in Burma is poor and a matter of grave concern. The UK Co-sponsored a resolution at the United Nations General Assembly in November 2002 that condemned the Burmese regime's record and I issued a public statement on 20 November giving my strong support for the resolution. On 18 February, the European Union issued a statement expressing concern over the deteriorating situation in Burma, including further politically inspired detentions and arrests. With EU partners, we are preparing a resolution for the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in April that will again press for action to address the human rights abuse in Burma.

China (North Korean Refugees)

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he will make to the Chinese authorities concerning (a) the repatriation of North Korean refugees in China, (b) the refusal by the Chinese Government to allow the UNHCR access to the North Koreans who have fled into China and (c) China's obligations under the 1951 UN Convention on the Treatment of Refugees. [102594]

Mr. Rammell: We regularly raise the issue of North Korean refugees with the Chinese, including at the biannual UK/China Human Rights Dialogue. At the last round of the Dialogue, on 21 November 2002, we urged China to allow the UNHCR access to the border areas and to observe its obligations under the 1951 Refugee Convention. We will continue to encourage greater co-operation between China and UNHCR on this issue.

Entry Clearance Officers

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when entry clearance officers in (a) New Delhi, (b) Mumbai, (c) Dhaka, (d) Tehran and (e) Nairobi ceased using the pre-assessment procedure for visa applications. [103145]

Mr. Rammell: Use of the pre-assessment procedure was ceased in: (a) New Delhi in August 2002; (b) Mumbai in February 2003; (c) Dhaka in January 2003 (but during January to March 2003 Dhaka has been operating a pre-assessment procedure for settlement applications to help accustom applicants to its withdrawal); (d) Tehran in July 2002; and (e) Nairobi in October 2002.

Family Visitor Visas

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives to increase family visitor visa applicants' awareness of their appeal rights have been undertaken since 1 January 2002. [103144]

Mr. Rammell: All unsuccessful applicants receive at the time of refusal written notices informing them about their right to appeal, and the procedure they need to follow should they choose to exercise this right. So all applicants are aware of their appeal rights.

India (Nuclear Tests)

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Indian Government on their intentions towards signing the nuclear test ban treaty. [103036]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly raise the issue of Indian accession to the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, and other international Treaties relating to non-proliferation, with the Indian Government.

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish Government regarding the administration of Northern Iraq following military conflict with Iraq. [102765]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met Turkish Foreign Minister Yakis at Copenhagen on 13 December. They did not discuss Iraq.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what (a) discussions he has held with and (b) representations he has received from multinational oil companies in relation to the exploitation of Iraqi oil following a conflict in the middle east; [102767]

(2) what discussions he has held with the US Government concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following any conflict which leads to regime change in Iraq; [102766]

(3) what recent discussions he has had with the US Administration regarding the exploitation of Iraqi oil reserves following military conflict in the middle east; [102764]

(4) what agreements the UK Government has made with multinational oil companies regarding oil exploitation following a conflict in Iraq; [102769]

(5) what discussions he has had with other Ministers concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following a conflict in the middle east. [102758]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is our position that Iraqi oil is owned by the Iraqi people. Its revenues should be used for the good of the people. We make this clear in all our contacts on the subject.

However, the current situation is not about oil, it is about weapons of mass destruction and the Iraqi regime deliberately flouting the will of the United Nations.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to protect the Kurds of Northern Iraq from any advance by the Turkish army, following a military attack on Baghdad by US and UK forces. [102768]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I understand that both the Kurdistan Democratic Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan in northern Iraq remain in close touch with the Government of Turkey about developments in the area. I am not aware of any decision by Turkey to advance against the northern Iraqi Kurds.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent studies his Department has undertaken of Iraqi oil reserves. [102770]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have not undertaken any new studies of Iraqi oil reserves.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make the UNMOVIC Working Document of 6 March on Iraq's unresolved disarmament issues available (a) to hon. Members and (b) through major retail outlets in the UK. [103288]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The document has already been placed in the library of the House. It is also available on the UNMOVIC web site, www.un.org/uniTiovic. Together with the most recent presentations by Dr. Blix and Dr. El Baradei to the UN Security Council and the twelfth UNMOVIC quarterly report it will also be published as a Command Paper (Cm 5785). It will be publicly available through The Stationery Office.

Khalid Sheikh Mohammed

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United States Administration in respect of its interrogation of the sons of Khalid Sheikh Mohammad about their father's alleged terrorist activities. [102728]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

UN Security Council

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits are being undertaken by Ministers to non-permanent member countries on the UN Security Council; what visits have been undertaken in the last month; what issues of (a) aid and (b) trade are and have been on the agenda; what offers are and have been made to those countries by the UK Government which are favourable to them, with the financial value of each such offer; whether the communication of a favourable arrangement has been made to any of these countries on behalf of another nation; and if he will make a statement. [100994]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister visited Spain on 27–28 February. My noble Friend Baroness Amos visited Guinea, Angola and Cameroon on 25–28 February and again on 10–12 March. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Mike O'Brien) visited Syria on 4–5 March. My hon. Friend the Minister for Europe (Mr. MacShane) visited Bulgaria on 6 March.

No aid or trade issues have been discussed during the visits. They have not been used to communicate any offers from third countries.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what independent legal advice is available to the Secretariat of the United Nations Security Council. [102073]

Mr. Rammell: The Secretariat of the United Nations is advised by the Office of Legal Affairs, which forms part of the Secretariat.

West Africa

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Baroness Amos had with the Government of Guinea regarding the present dispute between Liberia and Sierra Leone during her recent visit to Africa; what assessment he has made of the impact of this dispute on the region; what steps his Department is taking to address this situation; and if he will make a statement. [101774]

Mr. Rammell: During my noble Friend Baroness Amos's visit to Guinea on 25 February, she had discussions with President Conté about regional issues, including Liberia. The Government of Liberia continues to ignore the demands of the UN Security Council by sponsoring armed groups in the region and encouraging regional instability. Together with our international partners, our objective remains to contain these activities, including by maintaining effective UN sanctions against Liberia.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Officers of the House (Travel)

Mr. Maples: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission which officers of the House of Commons are allowed to travel by air (a) first class and (b) business class at public expense when on official duties. [102895]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The rules for air travel by officials on the business of the House are set out in the Staff Handbook which is available on the parliamentary intranet. Business class or first class travel is not normally allowed for flights within the UK. For flights outside the UK, officials are required to seek best value for money, including making use of discounted fares where possible. When travelling with Members, however, officials are normally allowed to book seats of the same class as the Members they are accompanying.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Legal Advice

Lynne Jones: To ask the Prime Minister what the Government's policy is on the publication of advice provided to the Government by (a) government law officers and (b) members of the private bar. [103471]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) on 14 March 2003, Official Report, column 482W, and the further answer my right hon. Friend, the Solicitor-General has given the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) today.

UNIKOM

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister what UK military forces have been committed to UNIKOM;

and whether these forces are mandated to resist all violations of the demilitarised zone on the Iraq-Kuwait border. [103832]

The Prime Minister: The UK currently contributes 11 military observers to UNIKOM, one of whom also acts as Commander of the British Contingent.

UNIKOM is mandated to take physical action to prevent small-scale violations of the demilitarised zone.

HEALTH

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 823W, on asylum seekers, what measures are in place to ensure that unaccompanied child asylum seekers receive care and support from council social services under the Children Act 1989. [103400]

Jacqui Smith: When an unaccompanied child arrives at an English port or airport the immigration service will refer him/her immediately to the relevant local authority social services department, which will be responsible for providing him/her with support under the Children Act 1989. Unaccompanied children can also claim asylum in-country. In such cases, they will either already have presented to a social services department as a child in need, or will be referred on by the immigration service.

NHS Estates (PFI)

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the public sector team of the fraud squad is investigating the NHS estates PFI scheme; and if he will make a statement. [97530]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 12 February 2003]: NHS Estates is not directly involved in any private finance initiative transactions. NHS Estates is, however, in the process of a one-off sale of Retained Estate and its trading arm, Inventures. No suggestion of fraud has come to light concerning the proposed joint venture to derive the best value from the Retained Estate and Inventures.

Correspondence

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answers of 27 February, refs. 95076 and 98813, for what reasons the delay in replying to the letters of (a) 21 November and (b) 8 October 2002 occurred. [100941]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 5 March 2003]: I apologise for the delays you have been experiencing in receiving replies to your correspondence.

Unfortunately, during the course of the year there have been several issues which have contributed to the overall delays in providing response and has led to outstanding correspondence. The introduction of a new information technology system to track correspondence throughout the Department took longer to bed in than expected.

The Customer Service Centre was established on 1 December to improve the Department's performance in handling telephone, written and e-mail inquiries from members of the public and their representatives. One of the first tasks of the Customer Services Centre has been to clear outstanding cases and to put systems in place to prevent this kind of backlog from building up again.

Emergency Medical Personnel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans his Department has to increase the number of emergency medical personnel (a) on motorbikes, (b) in ambulances and (c) in cars; [101314]

(2) how many ambulances serve Greater London; and how many paramedics there are (a) in cars, (b) on motorbikes and (c) in ambulances. [101315]

Mr. Lammy: Decisions of this nature are for each individual ambulance trust to determine locally. This information is not held centrally.

Foundation Hospitals

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the role is of the proposed regulator for foundation hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [102180]

Mr. Hutton: Our policy on the main functions of the Independent Regulator is set out in paragraph 3.28 of "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts". The Health & Social Care (Community Health & Standards) Bill makes provision for the Independent Regulator to authorise applications for national health service foundation trust status; set and revise the terms under which each NHS foundation trust operates and provides additional powers to intervene in the running of an NHS foundation trust in specified circumstances.

Hospital Amalgamations

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospital amalgamations that have taken place in the last five years; and what the total number of acute beds available in those hospitals was (a) before and (b) after the amalgamation. [91588]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available.

Hospital Hygiene

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Tim Loughton) of 26 February, 2003, Official Report, column 629W, on hospital hygiene, whether the handwashing provision in existing hospital buildings will be measured against the recommendations from NHS Estates for new buildings. [101950]

Mr. Lammy: National health service trust chief executives are responsible for ensuring adequate infection control measures. Infection control teams assist them in this; they will be actively involved in developing policies and monitoring practice. They will use their professional judgment to assess existing facilities and may use NHS Estates' guidelines to help them do so.

Learning Disability Boards

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that local learning disability boards communicate their proceedings to local interested parties; and what plans he has to issue guidance to them on this matter. [103088]

Jacqui Smith: Learning disability partnership boards were set up as a key part of the arrangements for implementing the White Paper, "Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century" (Cm 5086), published in March 2001. The role and functions of these boards were described in guidance issued in August 2001 (HSC 2001/016; LAC(2001)23).

The role of partnership boards is broadly to create strong local partnerships between providers of services, learning disabled people and family carers. Their aim is to develop local strategies to improve the opportunities for learning disabled people to be included as fully as possible in society and have greater independence and choice in their lives.

We hope that partnership boards will try to raise the profile of learning disability issues in their local areas, and to encourage their members, such as local authorities and primary care trusts, to do the same. This would support strongly the aim of greater inclusion of learning disabled people. We would therefore encourage boards to let local people know about their activities.

It would not be appropriate to issue specific guidance on this matter, which is clearly a matter for local decision. However, the valuing people support team, which has been set up to promote good practice and share practical experience across the country, has given practical advice to boards in its newsletters of July 2002 and February 2003 on making meetings available to the public. We support these messages. The support team website is at http://www.doh.qov.uk/vpst.

Mental Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training is available to NHS staff responding to the mental health needs of (a) current and (b) former servicemen and women. [101074]

Jacqui Smith: The mental health needs of current servicemen and women are met under the auspices of the Ministry of Defence, who are also responsible for ensuring that military and medical personnel receive appropriate training. The national health service provides services, by trained staff, to former service personnel alongside the general public according to their needs. Recent additional investment in mental health services and a comprehensive programme of modernisation will ensure that all those who have mental health needs are able to access appropriate treatment more quickly. Further information about this is available on the Department of Health web site at www.doh.gov.uk/mentalhealth. Additional guidance for general practitioners first issued following the events in the USA on 11 September 2001 was re-issued last year; this specifically draws attention to the needs of service personnel.

Northwich Park Hospital

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated in (a) the accident and emergency unit at Northwick Park Hospital and (b) in total at Northwick Park Hospital, broken down by clinical speciality, in each of the last five years. [100597]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is collected by National Health Service trust and not by individual hospital.

Northwick Park Hospital was part of Northwick Park and St. Marks NHS Trust until 1999, when the Trust merged with Central Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust to form North West London Hospitals NHS Trust. Figures for Northwick Park and St. Marks NHS Trust for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are shown in Table 1.

Table 2 shows figures for North West London Hospitals NHS Trust from 1999–2000 to 2001–02. For consistency, figures for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are shown for Northwick Park and St. Marks NHS Trust and Central Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust combined.

Note:

1. (RAU) Central Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust and (RFZ) Northwick Park and St. Marks Trust merged to form (RV8) North West London Hospitals NHS Trust with effect from the 1999–2000 data year.
2. A FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients, as one person may have several episodes within the year.
3. Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) are compiled from data sent by over 300 NHS Trusts in England. The Department of Health and I beg to move, liaise closely with these organisations in order to ensure that data quality is enhanced wherever possible. Inevitably, some shortcomings remain, but our goal is to minimise inaccuracies and bring about improvement over time.

Oldchurch Hospital

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Oldchurch Hospital in the London Borough of Havering has been inspected by the Commission for Health Improvement. [101985]

Mr. Hutton: Oldchurch Hospital has not been inspected by the Commission for Health Improvement.

Patient Advice and Liaison Services

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the money held by NHS trusts for patient advice and liaison services is ring-fenced; and how many paid employees are working for the patient advice and liaison service in each trust. [102150]

Mr. Lammy: It is for local purchasers of treatment and care to decide upon the relative priorities of their allocations and assign funding accordingly. £10 million was included in the overall allocation for 2002–03, with the expectation that this would be used to support patient advice and liaison services (PALS) in national health service trusts and primary care trusts.

The Department does not hold details of the number of staff working within PALS. A recent mapping exercise completed in January 2003 showed that 94 per cent. of all trusts have established a PAL service.

Prison Healthcare

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes are planned to the structure of prison healthcare; and if he will make a statement. [103069]

Jacqui Smith: On 25 September 2002, my right hon. Friends the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Health announced that funding responsibility for prison health services in England was to be transferred from the Home Office to the Department of Health with effect from April 2003. The Prison Service funding currently used to provide health care for prisoners will be transferred to the Department of Health from April 2003.

This is the first step in a process aimed at devolving funding and commissioning responsibility for prison health services to primary care trusts (PCTs) by 1 April 2006. PCTs will then become responsible for securing all health services for prisoners in their areas. During the transitional period of the next three years, the majority of funding for prison health services will be passed back to the prison service for allocation through prison establishments to ensure continuity of services.

Psychiatric Readmissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many emergency psychiatric readmissions there were in each of the last five years for (a) under 16s and (b) over 65s; and what the rate of readmission was in each case. [102840]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not collected.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Service Framework for Adult Mental Health and its subsequent implementation guidelines for schizophrenia; who is responsible for the implementation; and if he will make a statement. [102686]

Jacqui Smith: The national service framework (NSF) for mental health, published in 1999, is a 10-year programme of reform and investment in mental health services and is being implemented in accordance with its targets and milestones.

The implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guideline on schizophrenia will build on the NSF and should form part of the service development plans for each local health community in England.

The priorities and planning framework for the national health service in England 2003–06 sets key targets for improvements in mental health services including compliance with relevant NICE technology appraisals and clinical guidelines.

Voting Qualifications (Mental Health)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what circumstances a person would be (a) eligible and (b) ineligible to vote under the provisions in the draft Mental Health Bill. [103147]

Jacqui Smith: There are no proposals in respect of voting rights in the Mental Health Bill. In fact there is no such provision in the Mental Health Act 1983.

My noble Friend the Lord Chancellor, is responsible for the policy on eligibility to vote under the Representation of the People Act 1983 (as amended by the Representation of the People Act 2000).

I understand that he is considering the implications of the proposals in the Mental Health Bill on his policy for enfranchisement.

Waiting Lists (Mid-Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are waiting for in-patient treatment in the mid-Essex Hospital Trust area. [102538]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 13 March 2003]: There were 9,352 patients waiting for inpatient treatment at mid Essex Hospital Services National Health Services Trust at the end of January 2003.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Advertising (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102328]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department has not targeted any of its advertising specifically in Scotland. However, for some media it is impossible to remove coverage in Scotland. These include atellite TV, online, women's magazines, TV listings magazines, youth magazines and some national press titles who do not have Scottish editions.

Due to the format in which advertising information is collected and held, it will not be possible to provide the information requested without incurring disproportionate cost. Information at the level of detail requested is not available, and where it is possible to disaggregate figures for advertising in Scotland, the information could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Asylum Seeker/Refugee Children

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) asylum seeker and (b) refugee children there were in schools, broken down by education authority, in each academic year since 1997–98. [102296]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: It is not possible to say how many asylum seeker and refugee children there were in schools in each local education authority (LEA), for the period specified, because there is no requirement on LEAs to provide the Department with this information.

The most recent information available indicates that there are about 82,000 children from asylum seeking and refugee backgrounds in the UK. Nearly 63,000 of them are resident in Greater London where it is estimated that they comprise 6.04 per cent. of the total school population. Over 14,500 are resident in LEAs in the Home Office designated dispersal areas in the north east, north west, Yorkshire and the Humber, east and west Midlands and south west regions of England.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much funding has been allocated for the education of (a) asylum seeker and (b) refugee children since 1997–98 in each education authority. [102297]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: It is not possible to say how much funding has been allocated to Local Education Authorities (LEAs) for the education of children from asylum seeking and refugee backgrounds for the period specified as no specific factors are used to take account of these pupils in the formula for calculating education formula spending shares. It is for LEAs to consider whether to include provision by including relevant factors in their funding formulae.

Additional funding has been made available to LEAs supporting the children of asylum seekers dispersed to the Home Office designated cluster areas through the asylum seeker grant. The attached table shows how much funding has been allocated to these LEAs from 2000 to 2003.

From April 2003 this grant will be subsumed into the vulnerable children grant (worth £84 million) which will provide support for a range of vulnerable children including those from asylum seeking backgrounds. Funding to support all children, including those from asylum seeking and refugee backgrounds, with English as additional language requirements is available to all LEAs through the ethnic minority achievement grant (worth £155 million).

Bologna Process

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the involvement of British higher education in the Bologna process. [101721]

Margaret Hodge: The Government welcome British higher education's involvement in the deliberations and process arising from the Bologna Declaration. We have been working closely with our UK higher education partners and the devolved administrations since we signed the Declaration in 1999 to assess the impact on UK higher education and its relationship with the rest of Europe, and to influence the debate on the way forward. Representatives of the UK higher educations sector are engaged in discussions on the Bologna process, and an official from my Department represents UK interests at the twice-yearly meetings of the inter-Governmental Bologna follow-up group. This will inform the ministerial conference in Berlin in September this year.

Circular Documents

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the circular documents that were sent by his Department to (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools between 1 September 2001 and 31 August 2002; how many were on teacher workload; and how many pages each document contained. [102558]

Mr. Miliband: The following pages show the documents that were sent in the period 1 September 2001 and 31 August 2002 to (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools. In total 76 documents were sent to all primary schools and 85 documents were sent to all secondary schools. On teacher workload one document was sent to all primary schools and one document was sent to all secondary schools in the period 1 September 2001 and 31 August 2002. Both of the documents on teacher workload contained three pages each.

Ministers are committed to reducing the bureaucratic burden on schools and the Department has aimed to reduce the number of mailings to schools by 50 per cent. in the current 2002–03 academic year.

Details of each document and how many pages each contained have been placed in the Library.

Closed Circuit Cameras

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many closed circuit cameras have been installed in school classrooms; and if he will make a statement. [101882]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The use of closed circuit television cameras in classrooms is a matter for individual schools and no central record is kept of their number.

Earned Autonomy

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he expects to publish his Department's consultation paper on the proposed criteria for earned autonomy. [102140]

Mr. Miliband: We are pursuing our plans to publish a consultation paper on Earned Autonomy. This will include proposals on the criteria for Earned Autonomy and on the kinds of flexibility that might be made available. I will write to the hon. Member when we have a firm date for its release and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Free School Meals

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on his (a) current and (b) future policy on free school meals. [102858]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Section 512 of the Education Act 1996 (amended by the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 and the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999), sets out our current policy on free school meals. Children whose parents receive Income Support, Income Based Jobseekers Allowance and support provided under Part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 are currently eligible to receive free school meals.

From 6 April 2003, section 201 of the Education Act 2002 and its associated regulations will extend free school meals to children whose parents receive the Child Tax Credit, provided they are not entitled to receive the Working Tax Credit and have an annual income (as assessed by The Inland Revenue) that does not exceed £13,230. This change will protect an estimated 87,000 children in England who would otherwise lose their entitlement because of planned changes to the tax credit and welfare system from April 2003. We estimate that an additional 75,000 children will become entitled to free school meals as a result of this change.

Higher Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what ratio of students on bachelor or higher degree courses to students on foundation degree courses he plans for the additional numbers of students entering higher education by 2010. [101735]

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 2002-03

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 401 cols. W565 - 754 10 - 21 March 2003

Margaret Hodge: As set out in the Government's White Paper, 'The future of higher education' (Cm 5735), the emphasis in expanding student number will be on two year-work focussed foundation degrees.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he plans to differentiate fee caps by type of higher education institutions. [100303]

Margaret Hodge: The Higher Education White Paper sets out the Government's intention to introduce variable fees in 2006–07. A university will be able to set its fee at any level between £0 and £3,000 per year. Universities will have to have Access Agreements approved by the independent Access Regulator before they are allowed to introduce a contribution higher than the current standard fee. We have no plans to apply these proposals differentially to higher education institutions.

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if the funding mechanisms to deliver the proposals set out in the Future of Higher Education White Paper will encompass institutions whose students are not tied to a specific geographical location. [100022]

Margaret Hodge: The Graduate Contribution Scheme described in the White Paper 'The future of higher education' (Cm 5735) will apply to full-time undergraduate students only. The Open University is the main higher education institution providing distance learning for students who are geographically remote from its campus. The majority of such students are part-time and will not, therefore, be affected by the Graduate Contribution Scheme. For part-time students, the Open University will continue to set its own fee levels as now. However from 2004–05 students will benefit from a new package of support for part-time students. For those on courses which are equivalent to 50 per cent. or more of a full-time course, there will be means-tested tuition fee support, applied for through LEAs. This replaces the current discretionary fee waiver scheme and doubles the number of part-time students eligible for help with their fees. Students who get fee support will also be able to apply for a £250 grant from their LEA instead of a loan. And students entitled to fee support who have children will get help with their child care from the Access to Learning Fund. Also from 2004–05, we are extending discretionary fee waivers and hardship support for the first time to certain students on courses which are equivalent to at least 10 per cent. of a full-time course.

Individual Learners (EU Assistance)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which member states of the European Union assist individual learners by (a) tax relief, (b) government grants and (c) otherwise. [102389]

Margaret Hodge: This information is not collected centrally.

Language Teaching

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children from refugee and asylum-seeking families in schools in England do not have English as a first language; if he will list the schemes to teach them English; and how much the Department has spent and will spend on such teaching in each year from 2001–02 to 2005–06. [102289]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Approximately 632,000 (9.3 per cent.) of pupils in maintained schools in England are recorded as having a mother tongue other than English although it is not possible to determine how many of these have an asylum seeking or refugee background as Local Education Authorities (LEAs) are not required to provide such information.

Support for bilingual learners is through mainstream provision rather than separate schemes to teach English. There is no separate funding for teaching English as an additional language, but the Ethnic Minority Achievement Grant worth £154 million in 2001–02 and £155 million in 2002–03 and 2003–04 provides support for minority ethnic pupils at risk of underachievement and for those whose first language is not English. This includes British born children as well as those from asylum seeking and refugee families. From April 2003 the Vulnerable Children Grant worth £84 million for the next three years will provide support to help schools and LEAs meet the needs of a range of vulnerable pupils including those from asylum seeking backgrounds.

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many maintained secondary schools taught (a) French, (b) German, (c) Spanish, (d) Italian, (e) Latin and (f) Greek at (i) GCSE and (ii) A-level in each year since 1995. [102560]

Mr. Miliband: We do not collect data on how many maintained secondary schools taught French, German, Spanish, Italian, Latin and Greek at GCSE and A-level since 1995. We do hold information on the number of pupils in all maintained schools taking GCSE and A-level examinations in these subjects since 1995. They are as follows:

Learning and Skills

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how long it takes for a new qualification to be approved under Section 9 of the Learning and Skills Act 2000; what measures he has taken to reduce this period; and if he will make a statement. [102423]

Margaret Hodge: Since August 2002 the approval of external qualifications under Section 96 of the Learning and Skills Act 2000 are agreed monthly. Until then approvals were published on an annual basis. It currently takes, on average, fourteen working days from receipt of advice from the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority to approve new qualifications.

An examination of the approval process is currently under way to identify any scope for a further streamlining of the process while maintaining the necessary quality and rigour.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the Learning and Skills Council will provide Essex county council with the information to enable Essex county council to provide schools with their budgets for 2003–04; and if she will make a statement. [103326]

Margaret Hodge: Provisional allocations were announced in December 2002. There has been a short delay in setting final allocation but the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) sent final details of school sixth form allocations for the financial year 2003–04 to local LSCs on Thursday 6 March. They have now been passed to local education authorities for incorporation in the calculation of schools' budget shares for 2003–04.

Lost Working Days

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many working days were lost owing to industrial action by staff in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in 2002. [101534]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: No working days were lost in my Department or its non-departmental public bodies owing to industrial action in 2002. My Department recognises the importance of, and maintains its commitment to, working in partnership with our trade unions as a means of eliminating industrial action.

Open University

Brian White: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what role he plans for the Open University to deliver the aims of the Future of Higher Education White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [100021]

Margaret Hodge: We expect all higher education institutions to have a role in delivering the aims of the White Paper (Cm 5735). The Open University is particularly well placed to deliver the flexible teaching and learning which is vital to an inclusive higher education sector. Such flexible learning helps attract people with different demands and commitments. In addition, the Open University's modular approach to assessment and accreditation supports the aim of increasing credit based study.

From 2004–05, students at the Open University will also benefit from a new package of support for new and existing part-time students. For those on courses which are equivalent to 50 per cent. or more of a full-time course, there will be means-tested tuition fee support, applied for through LEAs. This replaces the current discretionary fee waiver scheme and doubles the number of part-time students eligible for help with their fees. Students who get fee support will also be able to apply for a £250 grant from their LEA instead of a loan. And students entitled to fee support who have children will get help with their child care from the Access to Learning Fund. Also from 2004–05, we are extending discretionary fee waivers and hardship support for the first time to certain students on courses which are equivalent to at least 10 per cent. of a full-time course.

School Buildings

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what figures he collates on an annual basis of the number of schools that have received substantial repairs to buildings. [101838]

Mr. Miliband: Because of the bureaucratic burden it would impose both locally and centrally, we do not collect information annually on the number of schools that have received substantial repairs to buildings. As part of asset management planning, we will be asking local authorities in the spring for data from condition and suitability surveys of all their schools, which will show the needs of school buildings. We previously asked for this information in 2000 and will be making the results available at the end of this month. We plan to publish a similar analysis of the 2003 data in the autumn.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how the Department will verify it has satisfied its investment strategy targets of (a) replacing or refurbishing 650 schools by 2004 and (b) addressing the most urgent repairs in 7,000 schools by 2004. [101880]

Mr. Miliband: Because of the bureaucratic burden it would impose both locally and centrally, we do not collect detailed information on the number of schools that are benefiting from the £9 billion of funding that we have made available from 2001–02 until 2003–04. However, we are content that our targets will be met: private finance initiative investment on its own will support the renewal of 426 schools in that period. Local education authorities have received over 3 billion of formulaic funding for their investment priorities. All maintained schools in England receive their own direct capital funding: for example, over the period 2001–02 to 2003–04 a typical secondary school of 1,000 pupils will have received more than £146,000 for its priority building needs.

Scottish University Places

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with (a) the Scotland Office and (b) the Scottish Executive on measures to ensure that Scottish students will have proportionate access to Scottish university places if there is an influx of English and Welsh students subsequent to the reforms outlined in his statement of 22 January 2003 to the House. [100733]

Margaret Hodge: We are in regular contact and meet regularly with both the Scotland Office and the Scottish Executive. As the White Paper 'The future of higher education' (Cm 5735) states, there will be discussions with the devolved administrations about the impact on the other UK countries of the proposals for student and institutional funding for higher education institutions in England. I expect those discussions to take place over the coming months.

Sex Education

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much funding is being provided by the Government to schools to carry out sex education programmes in 2002–03. [101966]

Mr. Miliband: Funding for personal, social and health education (PSHE), which includes sex and relationship education, falls within a larger funding stream for school improvement which is distributed through the Standards Fund. The total fund for 2002–03 is £190 million. It is for individual schools to decide how to allocate these resources to best support their PSHE programmes.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what experts in the area of child and teenage health his Department has consulted on the policies of sexual education taught in schools. [101967]

Mr. Miliband: The responsibility for determining a school policy on sex and relationship education rests with governing bodies and head teachers. In July 2000 we provided sex and relationship education guidance to maintained schools which sets out the requirement for schools to develop their policies in consultation with parents and to make them available for inspection. That guidance was developed in consultation with a wide range of bodies such as the Sex Education Forum, the National Health Education Group and the Teenage Pregnancy Unit.

The Department has not consulted on the policies of sexual education taught in independent schools. Independent schools are free to determine their own education programmes. However, they do have to meet minimum standards in relation to the quality of education provided. We would encourage them to have regard to the sex and relationship education guidance for maintained schools, but there is no requirement for them to do so.

Mr. Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills who is responsible for setting policy on sexual education curriculum and standards in schools (a) in England and (b) in each region. [101968]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The responsibility for determining a school policy on sex and relationship education rests with governing bodies and head teachers. This applies to maintained schools throughout England.

In July 2000 we provided sex and relationship education guidance to maintained schools which sets out the requirement for schools to develop their policies in consultation with parents and to make them available for inspection. Students are monitored through inspection undertaken by OFSTED.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what studies he has commissioned into the effect on (a) rates of teenage pregnancy, (b) abortion rates and (c) the rate of sexually transmitted diseases, with particular reference to HIV, of abstinence-only forms of sexual education. [101970]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills has not commissioned any studies into the effect of abstinence only education on the rates on teenage pregnancy, abortion or the rates of sexually transmitted infections (STIs).

The Department of Health has commissioned the Health Development Agency to review the evidence of effectiveness of interventions to reduce transmission of STIs and HIV. This concluded that there is no strong evidence for the effectiveness of abstinence only education approaches. The findings will be published later this year.

Standards Fund

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many officials in his Department are employed to work on the Standards Fund; [102291]

(2) how many publications have been sent out to schools relating to the Standards Fund in each year since its introduction. [102293]

Mr. Charles Clarke: A circular giving details of the Standards Fund is sent to local education authorities each year. It is for them to determine how that information is passed on to schools. Any additional information is posted on the Department's website or issued to LEAs by e-mail.

Five officials in the Department are employed specifically to manage the Standards Fund programme.

Student Fees

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list franchising arrangements between higher education institutions and associated colleges, indicating the proportion of student fees paid to each party. [102318]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 11 March 2003]: The data requested is not collected by my Department. However, the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) does collate information on higher education institutions which franchise students to other teaching institutions. I have asked the Chief Executive of HEFCE to send the hon. Member the information he has requested. The proportion of student fees paid to each party is a matter for the individual institutions concerned.

University Debt

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the total debt of universities in England was in the last year for which figures are available. [102398]

Margaret Hodge: The Higher Education Funding Council for England published "Outcomes of 2002 financial forecasts and annual operating statements" in January 2003. This report is based on information provided by higher education institutions in July 2002. The forecasts were based on assumptions reflecting the prevailing general economic climate and the funding announcements made at the time and so do not take account of the Spending Review settlement for 2003–04 to 2005–06.

The table is at Annex D of that report and shows the balance sheet for universities in England based on actual figures as at 31 July 2001 and forecasts to July 2006. Debt is some £4.5 billion as at end July 2001, significantly below the total funds for the sector of £11.69 billion overall. (Debt is quantified by adding 4d and 7d from the following table.)

As a result of the latest Spending Review announcements, Government spending on higher education will rise by more than 6 per cent. a year above inflation over the next three years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Burglary

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the detection rate for burglaries in homes was in (a) the Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) Tyne and Wear and (d) the UK in each year since 1997; [100769]

(2) how many burglaries per 1,000 households there have been in (a) the Jarrow constituency, (b) south Tyneside, (c) Tyne and Wear and (d) the UK in each year since 1997. [100768]

Mr. Denham: Crime statistics for South Tyneside are recorded at Basic Command Unit level (BCU). At BCU level, data has been collected from police forces since 1 April 1999, therefore figures are available only for the last three financial years. Detection rates and numbers of offences per 1,000 households for domestic burglary are given in the table.

Also included are figures at total police force area level for England and Wales.

Statistics for the remaining requested areas are not collected centrally.

Recorded crime statistics for South Tyneside Basic Command Unit (BCU) and England and Wales

South Tyneside detection rate (per cent.)	—	—	18	14	11
South Tyneside offences per 1,000 household	—	—	21.1	20.8	17.4
England and Wales detection rate (per cent.)	26	22	15	14	14
England and Wales offences per 1,000 household	25.8	23.5	22.0	20.0	21.4

1. Recorded on a calendar year basis up to 1997, and thereafter on a financial year, basis (12 months to March).
2. The number of crimes recorded in that financial year using the expanded offence coverage and revised counting rules which came into effect on 1 April 1998. This will also have affected the detection rate.
3. The counting rules for detections changed on 1 April 1999.

There was a change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which would have the tendency to increase the number of offences counted. Numbers of offences before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

There was also a change in counting rules for detections on 1 April 1999. The new instructions provide more precise and rigorous criteria for recording a detection, with the underlying emphasis on the successful result of a police investigation. Numbers of detections before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland (Helen Liddell) and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Paul Murphy).

Child Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children in prison are being held on the basic regime under the Incentives and Earned Privileges scheme. [101065]

Hilary Benn: The figures for the number of children being held on each level under the Rewards and Sanctions Scheme (formerly known as the Incentives and Earned Privileges Scheme), including those on basic, on 4 March 2003 are set out in the following table:

Community Safety Partnership

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the effectiveness of the Community Safety Partnership is (a) monitored and (b) inspected. [101495]

Mr. Denham: Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships (CDRPs) are required to conduct an audit of crime and disorder in their area and every three years, publish a strategy to tackle problems in their area. The CDRP is required to implement the strategy and keep it under review to monitor its effectiveness and make any necessary changes. Recorded crime figures at CDRP level are published in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin.

Measures in the Police Reform Act 2002 maintain the requirement for CDRPs to monitor their own progress and introduce new reporting mechanisms for CDRPs to advise progress on the implementation of their strategy to the Secretary of State. The new reporting process will be introduced during 2003–04 and will look for CDRPs to monitor progress on reducing crime and disorder and the misuse of drugs and on the effectiveness of local partnership working arrangements.

Correspondence

Mr. Peter Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Burnley to the Home Office regarding Mrs. S B Shah Ref S 851373/x of 4 February and 7 November 2002. [102390]

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 13 March.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 23 December 2002 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. Lutfi. [98961]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 10 March 2003, Official Report, column 68W.

Crime

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the change in the volume of crime was between 1997 and the latest date for which information is available, in each police authority in England. [99811]

Mr. Denham: The percentage changes for total recorded crime between the 12 months to March 1997 and the 12 months to March 2002, by police force area in England, are given in the table.

There was a change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998 which increased the total number of crimes recorded in England and Wales as a whole by 14 per cent., although this varied for individual police forces and offence types. Comparisons between the old counting rules and the new rules for the year ending March 1999, as well as the effects of the boundary change involving the Metropolitan Police on 1 April 2000, are included in the table. The percentage change in the number of recorded crimes given in the table is calculated so that the effects of these changes are excluded.

As a result of several forces adopting the principles of the National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) in advance of its official introduction across England and Wales on 1 April 2002, numbers of offences recorded for 2001–02 may have been inflated for those forces, and in total. Unlike the changes described above, this effect has not been factored out of the calculation of the percentage change in recorded crime given in the table.

Domestic Violence

Margaret Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to raise awareness of domestic violence in the criminal justice system, with particular reference to (a) prevention and (b) support for victims. [97758]

Mr. Denham: The Ministerial Group on Domestic Violence has among its priority areas for action, improving the interface between the criminal and civil law; and ensuring a consistent and appropriate response from the police and Crown Prosecution Service (CPS). Among the steps which are being taken in this are the following:

The Solicitor-General has announced the publication of the revised CPS Policy on prosecuting cases of domestic violence, which sets out how the CPS deals with such cases.

We will be supporting the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) in wide ranging work on the police response to domestic violence.

Policing domestic violence—a modular training programme is a national training product developed by Centrex and issued in November 2002. The programme is intended to provide a structured but flexible approach to the delivery of domestic violence training within the police service.

The National Policing Plan requires that police authorities should have effective strategies and procedures in place to respond quickly and effectively to domestic violence incidents. The number of domestic violence incidents as measured by Best Value Performance Indicator 153 is a key performance indicator in the plan. The Prison and National Probation Services agreed a joint strategy for combating domestic violence which was taken to the Correctional Services accreditation panel in September 2002. This committed those Services to working together in this area and sharing resources and knowledge whenever appropriate. The National Probation Service has been running a domestic violence research pathfinder to evaluate the most effective way of working to combat domestic violence since 2000.

A consultation paper will be published shortly with further proposals for tackling domestic violence.

Margaret Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list new initiatives to tackle domestic violence since 1997; and what their cost was. [97760]

Mr. Denham: The readily available information on new initiatives to tackle domestic violence, and their costs, are as follows.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary recently announced a £14 million three-year funding package including help for the 376 Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships across the country to develop practical strategies for dealing with domestic violence at a local level. The Home Office is to fund the appointment of a new co-ordinator's post, based within the Local Government Association, to work with local authorities and police forces to help them deal effectively with domestic violence in their communities.

The Violence against Women (VAW) Initiative part of the Home Office's Crime Reduction Programme (CR13), invested £10.7 million to identify the most effective and cost effective approaches to reducing domestic violence and rape and sexual assault by known perpetrators.

The Ministerial Group on Domestic Violence held its inaugural meeting in December 2001 and brings together eight Ministers to progress five priority areas for action:

Increasing safe accommodation choices for women and children;

Developing early and effective healthcare interventions;

Improving the interface between the criminal and civil law;

Ensuring a consistent and appropriate response from the police and Crown Prosecution Service;

Promoting Education and Awareness Raising.

The Department of Health are funding a £48,000 programme to pilot routine antenatal screening for domestic violence.

Consultation on the Department of Health's recently published National Women's Mental Health Strategy: 'Women's Mental Health: Into the Mainstream' has just finished (December 2002). One of the themes of the strategy is the need to address violence and abuse as a core mental health issue.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has announced that a new national 24-hour free helpline to help women and children fleeing domestic violence will be set up, in a groundbreaking arrangement with Comic Relief.

The Government will spend a further £7 million to develop new refuges in partnership with local authorities around the country, to ensure better availability of safe accommodation for women and children forced to leave their homes.

Women and Equality Unit has commissioned, for the first time, a review of the economic and social costs of domestic violence.

The Adoption and Children Act makes clear that when a court is considering whether a child has suffered or is likely to suffer harm under the Children Act 1989, this harm includes harm a child may suffer as a result of witnessing the ill-treatment of another person.

The Lord Chancellor's Department have also set up a Domestic Violence Advisory Group to engage with the full range of stakeholders involved in dealing with domestic violence.

The Lord Chancellor's Department has also made significant contribution to the planning and funding of the second Inter-Governmental Conference 'Raising the Standards' held in Cardiff on 21 February 2003, and to the series of six nation-wide events on 'The Particular Challenges of Dealing with Domestic Violence in the Asian Community'.

The Solicitor General has announced the publication of the revised Crown Prosecution Service Policy on prosecuting cases of domestic violence.

'Policing domestic violence—a modular training programme' is a national training product developed by Centrex and issued in November 2002.

The National Policing Plan states that police authorities should have effective strategies and procedures in place to respond quickly and effectively to domestic violence incidents.

The Prison and National Probation Services agreed a joint strategy for combating domestic violence which was taken to the Correctional Services accreditation panel in September 2002.

The National Probation Service has been running a domestic violence research pathfinder to evaluate the most effective way of working to combat domestic violence since 2000.

A consultation paper setting out proposals to prevent domestic violence will be published by Spring 2003. The consultation will aim to generate a comprehensive response from the public, voluntary sectors and others, to ensure the widest possible agreement on what needs to be done to prevent and deal with domestic violence. This consultation will also consolidate the initial consultation on domestic violence in the 'white paper Justice for All'.

Additionally the following information and guidance has also been produced since 1997.

Living Without Fear: an integrated approach to tackling violence against women—Home Office and Women and Equality Unit jointly published the policy document in June 1999. This was a practical document setting out what actions were already completed, in hand or planned and giving examples of individual initiatives by statutory and non-statutory agencies.

Break the Chain—An information leaflet for domestic violence survivors and those who might be able to help them. Published January 1999.

Loves me loves me not—An updated version of Break the Chain leaflet, published in July 2002.

Multi-Agency Guidance for Addressing Domestic Violence—Guidance to agencies on dealing with domestic violence published in 2000.

Home Office Circular 19/2000—Circular to police, in conjunction with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO).

Home Office Circular-Protection from Harassment Act 1997—Issued to Chief Officers of Police and copied to Chief Crown Prosecutors, Probation Boards Association, Magistrates Association issued May 2002.

Domestic Violence: a resource manual for health care professionals—Guidance aimed to equip healthcare practitioners with the skills, knowledge and confidence to identify domestic violence and respond appropriately to help break the cycle of repeat victimisation.

Drug Treatment

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what drug treatment facilities are available for juveniles in (a) local authority secure units, (b) secure training centres and (c) young offender institutions; and who provides them. [102449]

Hilary Benn: The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales (YJB) is responsible for commissioning and purchasing juvenile secure accommodation from the prison Service, private sector secure training centres (STCs) and local authority secure units LASUs), and for setting and monitoring standards.

The YJB requires custodial establishments to provide access to substance misuse assessments, care plan development, withdrawal services and education/awareness programmes.

Prison Service Drugs Strategy Directorate is responsible for drugs services in young offender institutions (YOIs). The Prison Service model for delivering druges services is CARATs (Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare services). CARATs services can be provided by both prison service staff and external agencies. All young peole should be screened by health staff as part of their general induction assessment. CARATs staff support this process and may provide specialist intervention as appropriate.

STCs and LASUs generally provide in-house substance misuse services managed by each unit's health provision and education services. Some LASUs also commission additional specialist services from the community. Young people are screened on arrival to the units, and prevention education takes place as pat of personal social health education.

Recognising that there is inconsistent provision across the secure estate, the YJB has commissioned Galahad consultants to identify the substance misuse needs of young people in custody, the level of current service provision and gaps. Their final report will be available in June 2003 and will inform future work in this area. The YJB has also commissioned Drugscope to develop effective practice guidance for youth justice staff on working with young people with substance misuse needs; this will be available in June 2003.

The national drug strategy relaunched by the Home Office in December 2002 identifies as a priority vulnerable young people and those within the youth justice system. The YJB has been allocated £300 million over three years from 2003 to improve substance misuse services across the juvenile secure estate.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what form of drug treatment is available for prisoners (a) on remand and (b) serving sentences of less than two years. [102465]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service has in place a range of drug interventions to address the needs of low, moderate and severe drug-misusing prisoners who are either on remand or serving sentences of less than two years. Detoxification is available in all local and remand prisons; Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare (CARAT) services are available in all prisons—as is access to the voluntary drug testing programme.

The Service recognises that many prisoners who serve two years or less are likely—due to their sentence length—to be excluded from participation in drug rehabilitation programmes. The Service has, as part of the recent Spending Review 2002 settlement, received significant funding to boost treatment provision. Part of this funding will be channelled into developing a low-intensity programme specifically targeted at those prisoners who will only be in custody for a short period.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Djanogly) of 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 772W, what forms of (a) drug detoxification and (b) other types of rehabilitation programme are available for prisoners serving sentences of less than two years; and if he will make a statement. [102468]

Hilary Benn: Drug detoxification is available in all local and remand prisons. Detoxification can be made available to reduce the effects of withdrawal symptoms from specific drugs or to provide maintenance prescribing. The Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare (CARAT) service is available in all prisons as is access to the voluntary drug programme.

Prisoners who serve two years or less are likely, due to sentence length, to be unable to participate in a drug rehabilitation programme. The Prison Service received funding from the recent Spending Review 2002 to boost treatment provision. Part of this funding will be used to develop a programme specifically targeted at those prisoners who will be in custody for a short period.

Drug Use (Wales)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of (a) class A drug and (b) illegal drug use in Wales. [102537]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The 2001–02 British Crime Survey estimates that two per cent. of adults aged 16 to 59-years-olds in Wales have taken a Class A drug in the last year. The equivalent estimate for England is three per cent. The difference between the two estimates is statistically significant.

The 2001–02 British Crime Survey estimates that eight per cent. of adults aged 16 to 59-years-olds in Wales have taken an illicit drug in the last year. The equivalent estimate for England is 12 per cent. Again, the difference between the two estimates is statistically significant.

Inmate Information Service

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department [pursuant to his answer of 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 78W], on the Inmate Information System, which prisons are (a) linked and (b) not linked on the Inmate Information System; how many prisoners' records are (i) linked and (ii) not linked on the Inmate Information System; and if he will make a statement. [101929]

Hilary Benn: All prisons are linked to the Inmate Information system (IIS). All historical information is retained on IIS and is accessible from all prisons. There is currently no automatic method of linking prisoners' records, but this will be a component of a replacement system that is now being considered.

Currently, manual linking of previous custody information is required as there is no reliable unique identifier (a new prison number is allocated at the beginning of each period of custody) and the National Insurance number is not always available. Inevitably, this means that details of previous custody may not always be available. This limitation in the current IIS system will be addressed in the replacement system now being considered.

Landmine Act 1998

Dr. Jenny Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been under the Landmine Act 1998; and how many have been successful. [102245]

Hilary Benn: Persons proceeded against and those found guilty of summary offences under the Landmines Act 1998 cannot be separately identified on the Home Office Court proceedings database. There have been no cases of persons proceeded against for indictable or triable either way offences under the Act reported to the Home Office.

Manslaughter

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the regulatory impact assessment on the issue of corporate manslaughter which commenced in September 2002 was completed by the end of 2002; when he expects to put proposals before the House for an offence of corporate manslaughter; and if he will make a statement. [103287]

Hilary Benn: Contributions to the Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) were requested by the end of the year. We have since been analysing the responses and actively encouraging those organisations which had not replied, in order to produce an RIA. The Government remains committed to legislating on corporate manslaughter and will do so as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Mr. Andrew Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 12 March 2003, Official Report, column 975W, on manslaughter, when he expects to publish the digest of responses to the consultation paper; and if he will make a statement. [103453]

Hilary Benn: We will be preparing a summary of responses to the consultation, and will make this available as soon as possible. Following completion of the consultation, we are at present conducting a regulatory impact assessment on the proposals.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the crime detection rate has been within the Metropolitan Police force area during each of the last five years; [100600]

(2) how many robberies were committed in each of the last five years within the Metropolitan Police force area. [100604]

Mr. Denham: Overall detection rates and numbers of robbery offences recorded for the Metropolitan Police are given in the table.

	Robery offences recorded
1997[1]	27,386
1998–99[2]	26,330
1999–2000[3]	36,317
2000–01[4]	40,992
2001–02[4]	53,547

	Detection rate percentage for total recorded crime
1997[1]	26
1998–99[2]	22
1999–2000[3]	16
2000–01[4]	15
2001–02[4]	14

[1] Recorded on a calendar year basis up to 1997, and thereafter on a financial year basis (12 months to March).

[2] The number of crimes recorded in that financial year using the expanded offence coverage and revised counting rules which came into effect on 1 April 1998. This will also have affected the detection rate.

[3] The counting rules for detections changed on 1 April 1999.

[4] Figures recorded on the new boundary basis, whereby the Metropolitan Police ceded parts of its boundary to three surrounding police forces, Essex. Hertfordshire and Surrey, on 1 April 2000.

There was a change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which would have the tendency to increase the number of offences counted. Numbers of offences before and after this date are therefore no directly comparable.

There was also a change in counting rules for detections on 1 April 1999. The new instructions provide more precise and rigorous criteria for recording a detection, with the underlying emphasis on the successful result of a police investigation. Numbers of detections before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

PFI Prisons

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which PFI funded prisons have payments to the contractors related to reoffending rates. [101763]

Hilary Benn: A performance bonus can be paid to Premier Prison Services Ltd if the contractor reduces recidivism in respect of the proportion of prisoners at the therapeutic community at Dovegate prison who have undertaken at least 15 months therapy in the community. They must also not have committed an offence within 12 months of release from custody; There has been insufficient time for a bonus to become payable because the therapeutic community only opened in November 2001.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the average cost per year of a prisoner held in (a) PFI funded and (b) non PFI funded prisons in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [101764]

Hilary Benn: The average cost per prisoner held in Private Finance Initiative (PFI) funded and non PFI funded prisons in each of the last three years is shown, in the table.

These figures are establishment costs only and exclude any share of Headquarters overheads. Establishment cost per prisoner figures cannot therefore be compared with the overall Prison Service cost per prisoner figure, which includes all expenditure.

The figures for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 are expressed in cash terms, with those for 2001–02 expressed in resource terms.

* PFI prisons

Notes:

1. Buckley Hall and Blakenhurst reverted to public sector management in 2000–01 and 2001–02 respectively.

2. Ashfield and Rye Hill opened in 1999–2000 and 2000–01 respectively. Part year performance is not reported.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the proportion of savings realised from PFI funded prisons which are due to (a) capital costs and (b) running costs in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [101762]

Hilary Benn: Savings in private finance initiative (PFI) prison projects are expressed as the percentage difference between the Net Present Value of each project compared with its Public Sector Comparator; the Net Present Value of a project is its discounted value over the duration of the contract. Savings made in respect of the seven PFI funded prisons are shown in the following table.

	Percentage
Altcourse	17
Ashfield	14
Dovegate	17
Forest Bank	16
Lowdham Grange	14
Pare	1
Rye Hill	16

It is not possible to separate capital and running costs because a single unitary charge is paid to the contractor in respect of the total cost of each prison.

Police

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of police funding was spent on police pensions in each of the last 20 years; and what amounts these figures represent. [101246]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the following table.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy Police statistics 1983–84 to 2000–01 (Actuals) and 2001–02 to 2002–03 (Estimates).

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there were in the London borough of Havering in each month since September 2002. [101956]

Mr. Denham: Information on the number of officers in each Basic Command Unit (BCU) is provided annually (31 March) by each police force to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary. Information on London borough strength is not centrally collected on a more frequent basis. The deployment of resources between the London borough divisions and the other specialist units of the Metropolitan Police Service is an operational matter for the Commissioner.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 589W, to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes), setting out police strength for each Basic Command Unit for each force in England and Wales, including London boroughs at 31 March 2002.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the Answer of 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 2, on police pensions, what he estimates the cost to public funds would be of establishing a pay-as-you-go police pension scheme applying to new recruits only. [101926]

Mr. Denham: I understand that my hon. Friend means what we estimate the cost would be of establishing a funded pension scheme applying to new recruits only. As stated in the National Policing Plan we are considering options for modernising police pensions to make them more flexible and affordable for future entrants. As part of this reform, we will also seek to meet the needs of police authorities and chief officers for a scheme which brings greater certainty about the financial impact on individual police forces. Unlike in a pay-as-you go scheme, the employer pays contributions into a pension fund at the same time as the employee. The eventual pension is then paid out of the fund. In a pay-as-you go scheme the employer's costs are deferred until the pension comes into payment. The rate of employer's contributions in a funded police pension scheme for new entrants would depend mainly on the value of the pensions and other benefits provided, and the share borne by the officers. The immediate effect of introducing a funded scheme for new entrants, while keeping the existing scheme on a pay-as-you go basis, would be to increase costs. This is because the cost of paying employer contributions in respect of contributing members of a new funded scheme would be added to the continuing cost of paying the pension benefits of retired members of the current pay-as-you go scheme.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made with the Home Office's National Recruitment Standards Project, with special reference to recruitment and retention of people with diabetes in the police service; and when the recommendations for the proposed new medical standards will be available for consultation. [102410]

Mr. Denham: The National Recruitment Standards project has made progress on a number of key areas:

> Eligibility criteria and recruitment practices covering issues such as criminal convictions and qualifications were reviewed, agreed and put in place in October 2001.
> A national fitness test for police recruitment was put in place in April 2002. This is being reviewed at the end of its first year.
> The nationality bar on police recruitment was lifted on 1 February 2003. This removed an unnecessary barrier to recruitment and widened the recruitment pool.

New standards for eyesight have been agreed by the Police Advisory Board for England and Wales. The new standards which take account of our intention to extend the employment provisions of the Disability and Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA) to the police service will be put in place on 1 April 2003.

Research has been undertaken to develop new job-related medical standards. A draft report by QinetiQ will be subject to consultation with the police service between April and June. The views of UK Diabetes and other interested groups will inform the consultation. We aim to put new standards to the Police Advisory Board in late summer.

A national application procedure has been developed with the police service. This includes a national application form and recruitment material designed to attract hard to reach groups. A police recruitment website has been developed to support the new procedures. The website will provide applicants with all the information they need about joining the police service and will enable them to apply on line.

A national procedure for assessing and selecting new recruits has been piloted in five forces and trialled by three forces. These procedures will be introduced in all forces over the next year.

Prison Service

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the Prison Service staff referred to on page 195 of the 2001–02 Home Office annual report are based in prisons. [101910]

Hilary Benn: Of the 42,057 permanent Prison Service staff included in the total quoted in the 2001–02 Home Office Annual Report, 39,983 were based in prisons.

Prisoners

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in UK prisons have been diagnosed with a mental illness; and what support is given to them. [102231]

Hilary Benn: A survey of mental ill health in the prison population of England and Wales, undertaken in 1997 by the Office for National Statistics, showed that some 10 per cent. of remanded men, 7 per cent. of sentenced men and 14 per cent. of all women prisoners had suffered from a functional psychosis in the past year. Some 59 per cent. of remanded men, 76 per cent. remanded women, 40 per cent. of sentenced men and 63 per cent. of sentenced women had a neurotic disorder in the week prior to being interviewed for the survey. These rates are considered to be still representative of the prison population. Applying them to the current population would indicate that, on any one day, there would be over 5,500 prisoners in England and Wales who would have suffered from symptoms of a functional psychosis in the previous 12 months and over 32,000 who would have suffered symptoms of a neurotic disorder in the previous week. Some prisoners will fall into both categories. All Prison Service establishments and their NHS partners are working to implement the improvements to mental health services set out in 'Changing the Outlook, a Strategy for Developing and Modernising Mental Health Services in Prisons' published in December 2001. Prisoners who need in-patient treatment for mental disorder may be transferred to psychiatric hospitals. The care and treatment of mentally disordered prisoners who do not need to be admitted to hospital is generally undertaken by prison healthcare staff under the supervision of NHS specialists and increasingly, in establishments with the greatest mental health need, by NHS-funded multi-disciplinary in-reach teams. The commitments made in the NHS Plan (2000), for an additional 300 staff to be employed by 2004 to provide such in-reach services to prisoners, are being implemented. Mental illness in the prison population of Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive. While the institutions in Northern Ireland are dissolved, responsibility for this subject rests with Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisoners aged (a) 18–20 and (b) juvenile prisoners are drug dependent on entering prison. [102448]

Hilary Benn: Neither the Prison Service nor the Youth Justice Board keep records of the percentage of drug-dependent prisoners who, on entering prison, are (a) aged 18–20 or (b) juveniles. Based on research conducted by the Office for National Statistics, however, it is estimated that 54 per cent. of those being received into custody report drug-dependency in the year prior to justice.

A review into substance misuse by young people is already under way. The findings from this review, expected to be available in the summer, will help inform the drug—and other substance misuse—needs of young people in custody.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in prisons in England and Wales on 30 June 2002, broken down by ethnic group. [102456]

Hilary Benn: The number of prisoners held in prisons in England and Wales on 30 June 2002 broken down by ethnic group is given in the table.

Ethnic group	Number of prisoners held in prisons
White	54,988
Black	11,022
South Asian	2,198
Chinese and other	2,947
Unrecorded	63
Total	71,218

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were (a) considered and (b) approved for parole in each of the last five years. [102457]

Hilary Benn: The information is as follows:

Year	Cases considered	Parole awarded
1997–98	5,242	2,006
1998–99	6,078	2,383
1999–2000	6,219	2,561
2000–01	5,576	2,584
2001–02	5,514	2,791

The information requested is published by the Parole Board in its Annual Reports and Accounts for 2001–02.

Reconvictions

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of 18 to 20-year-olds who were reconvicted within two years of leaving prison in each of the last three years were drug-addicts; and if he will make a statement. [102447]

Hilary Benn: The information is not available.

Visas (Subcontinent)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has undertaken since August 2002 of changes in the rate of refusals of family visit visa applications from (a) New Delhi, (b) Islamabad, (c) South Asia, (d) Amman, (e) Tehran and (f) the Middle East; and if he will make a statement. [101403]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign Office, the Home Office and the Lord Chancellor's Department have been working closely together since the Government introduced the right of appeal in family visit cases. An interdepartmental review was established in January 2001. The final report of the inter-departmental review group has been delayed due to pressures of commencing Part 5 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. The research work commissioned by the Immigration Research and Statistics Service at the Home Office is now being finalised and I understand that it should be published very shortly.

Youth Inclusion Programme

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he plans to expand the number of areas in which the Youth Inclusion Programme operates; [102459]

(2) what the total funding is for the Youth Inclusion Programme for (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06; [102458]

(3) how many (a) robberies, (b) burglaries, (c) drugs offences, (d) offences of violence against the person and (e) thefts of motor vehicles were recorded in each of the Youth Inclusion Programme areas in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000, (iii) 2001 and (iv) 2002; [102460]

(4) how many 13 to 16-year-olds participated in the Youth Inclusion Programme in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000, (iii) 2001 and (iv) 2002; and what percentage of those young people are considered to remain at risk of offending; [102462]

(5) how many 13 to 16-year-olds were arrested in each of the Youth Inclusion Programme areas in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000, (iii) 2001 and (iv) 2002. [102461]

Hilary Benn: The Youth Inclusion Programme (YIP) is managed by the Youth Justice Board. Since 1999, 70 YIP schemes have run in the most deprived neighbourhoods in England and Wales, each targeting the 50 young people, aged 13 to 16 in the local area, at greatest risk of social .exclusion.

We know that a total of 22,688 young people have been actively engaged in YIP schemes since the programme began, but a detailed breakdown of the number of 13 to 16-year-olds that have participated in each of the last four years in each of the 70 schemes is not available centrally. Nor do we hold data on arrests of all 13 to 16-year-olds, or overall levels of recorded crimes, broken down by the neighbourhoods in which each YIP scheme operates.

We measure the success of the YIP schemes principally through arrest rates among the scheme's participants, which show that overall arrest rates have been reduced by 64 per cent. among those in the target group who have been actively engaged in the programme. In addition, independent evaluation of the YIP programme showed that between January and March 2002 around 70 per cent. of YIP areas showed reductions in overall crime, with reductions up to 40 per cent. We consider these to be more reliable measures of success than attempting to assess the extent to which the programme has reduced the risk that individual participants will subsequently offend.

We announced on 21 October last year that the existing YIP programme will continue for a further three years from April 2003, with Home Office funding of £7 million per year. This is the minimum provision and does not prevent additional schemes being funded, for example by Children's Fund partnerships in meeting the requirement we are placing on them from April this year, to spend at least 25 per cent. of their allocations on specific youth crime reduction measures.

We are looking more fundamentally at relevant services, programmes and interventions for young people at risk of crime and other negative outcomes in the Green Paper on children at risk that we will be publishing later in the spring.

Youth Justice

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been put in place by the Youth Justice Board to undertake the work that was being done by The Children's Society's national remand and review initiative. [101729]

Hilary Benn: The Children Society's national remand review initiative, funded by the Youth Justice Board, identifies alternatives for young people in custody who could nonetheless be managed in the community if appropriate support packages were provided.

The Board plans to provide for their work through youth offending teams from April 2003. This will be supported by effective practice guidance, training and an independent study of the scheme's operation to inform future good practice development.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pension Credit

21. Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the cost projections for the pension credit. [102965]

Mr. McCartney: This Government will be spending an additional £1 billion in 2003–04 as a result of the introduction of pension credit, rising to an additional £2 billion in 2004–05. Total spending on pension credit in 2004–05 is projected to be around £6 billion.

From October 2003 pension credit will provide a guaranteed minimum income for those aged 60 and over. It will ensure pensioners with modest savings no longer lose a pound of pensions or other savings they have built up.

It has been designed so that customers will find it easy to apply for, it will be simpler, fairer, less intrusive and bureaucratic. The weekly means test will be abolished so for those people over 65 they will need only to report major life events, with the majority of people not having to notify changes in their financial circumstances for a period of five years.

This Government is committed to tackling pensioner poverty.

From April 2003, no single pensioner will have to get by on an income of less than £102.10 a week under the minimum income guarantee (£155.80 for couples).

Nearly two million people are benefiting from minimum income guarantee and the take up campaign has put an average £20 a week extra in the pockets of 149,000 people who would not have received it otherwise. In the hon. Member's constituency around 1,500 people receive this entitlement.

From April 2003, basic State Pension will be £77.45 for singles (£123.80 for couples). An increase of £100 a year for single people and £160 a year for couples. In future years the basic State Pension will increase by 2.5 per cent. or the level of the September RPI, whichever is higher.

Last winter (2001–02) over eight million households benefited from the £200 Winter Fuel Payment, worth around £4 a week. It will continue at this rate for the rest of this Parliament. Some 18,305 people in the Huntingdon constituency received a Winter Fuel Payment for last winter.

All in all, we will be spending around £7.5 billion extra on pensioners in 2003–04 as a result of the measures introduced since 1997. This includes around £3.5 billion that is being spent on the poorest third of pensioners.

Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the impact of the pension credit on the poorest pensioners. [102966]

Mr. McCartney: Our priority has always been to focus help on those who need it most, that is why we introduced the Minimum Income Guarantee. As a result, nearly two million people are benefiting from Minimum Income Guarantee and the take up campaign has put an average £20 a week extra in the pockets of 149,000 people who would not have received it otherwise. In the hon. Member's constituency around 3,400 people are in receipt of the Minimum Income Guarantee.

WE are now going a step further and introducing Pension Credit which will reward not penalise saving. The poorest third of pensioners will be at least £1,500 a year better off than in 1997 due to this Government's tax and benefit changes.

Around half of all pensioner households will be eligible for Pension Credit and, on average, stand to gain around £400 a year. Pension Credit will be simple to apply for, and signals the end of the intrusive weekly means test that pensioners find so demeaning.

Pension credit will provide a guaranteed minimum income for those aged 60 and over. No single pensioner will have to get by on an income of less than £102.10 a week (£155.80 for couples).

It will also ensure pensioners, aged 65 and over with modest savings, no longer lose a pound of pensions or other savings they have built up. Pensioners will receive 60p for every pound of income they have between the level of the savings credit threshold and the guarantee level potentially giving them a maximum reward of £14.79 (£19.20 for couples). Above this level the savings credit will reduce progressively, with those on incomes over £139 for single pensioners (£203 for couples) ceasing to be entitled. (These limits will be higher for those with special needs or extra payments).

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the projected cost is per annum of the pension credit. [102591]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Yeovil, Mr. David Laws, on 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 189W.

Small Business Employment Incentives

23. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what financial incentives he has put in place for small and medium-sized enterprises to increase their workforce; and if he will make a statement. [102967]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Jobcentre Plus provides high quality services to employers, helping them to fill job vacancies quickly and effectively with well-prepared and motivated employees. This activity works in tandem with our welfare to work programmes, which are providing thousands of people with the skills, experience and confidence they need to succeed in the modern labour market.

Post Office Card Accounts

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what action he is taking to help (a) benefit recipients and (b) pensioners open a post office card account. [102959]

Malcolm Wicks: The card account is just one of three account options available to customers. We are running an information campaign to highlight all the options available, including access at a post office. We are writing to benefit and pensions recipients with detailed information about all the options available to them, including the post office card account. Customers can also call the Direct Payment Information line if they have any questions about changing to direct payment.

Disability Discrimination Act

Miss Anne Begg: What measures will be put in place to ensure that businesses fulfil their obligations under Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [102961]

Maria Eagle: We are currently working to remind businesses of their current and future duties under the DDA including commissioning national advertising, organising regional events, developing a regional award scheme for best practice and mailshots to business organisations. We are also working with the Disability Rights Commission on further publicity leading up to introduction of the new Part 3 duties in October 2004.

Advertising (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102336]

Mr. McCartney: The Department for Work and Pensions advertises extensively in Scotland. However most of the campaigns are national so disaggregating the costs for advertising and media for any one region or country is only possible at disproportionate cost.

Age Discrimination

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to end age discrimination against older people in the workplace; and if he will make a statement. [102944]

Mr. McCartney: We have made a pledge to tackle age discrimination and we are committed to introducing age legislation covering employment, vocational training and guidance by 2006.

Our current Pensions Green Paper 'Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement' reinforces our commitment to extend employment opportunities for people with a range of proposals including providing extra back to work help for over 50s, piloting local agents in the business community to help employers to realise the benefits of recruiting and retaining older workers, and a number of changes to tax and pension rules which will give individuals more choice and opportunity to stay in work longer. We have also made it clear that in the forthcoming age legislation compulsory retirement ages are likely to be unlawful, unless employers can show they are objectively justified. Employers will therefore need to adopt more flexible approaches to retirement.

We are already encouraging employers to adopt non-ageist employment practices through our Age Positive Campaign. The campaign raises employers' awareness of the business benefits of an age diverse workforce and encourages a flexible approach to retirement to open up choice and opportunity for individuals to stay in work longer.

In 1999, we published the Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment which sets out the standards for non-ageist approaches to recruitment, training, promotion, redundancy and retirement. The code was developed with leading organisations including the CBI, TUC, the Employers Forum on Age and Age Concern. Evaluation shows that from 1999 to 2001 the number of companies using age in recruitment had already fallen from 27 per cent. to 13 per cent. and the number of companies having a policy against employing older workers had dropped from 14 per cent to 7 per cent.

Since then we have continued to promote the business case for recruiting, training and retaining older workers through the Age Positive campaign, workshops for smaller businesses, and publications including 'Good Practice in the Recruitment and Retention of Older Workers' (December 2001), 'Flexible Retirement: A Snapshot of Large Employers' Initiatives' (June 2002) and during Age Positive week, in December 2002 we published 'Age Diversity at Work: a practical guide for business'. The campaign has been attracting considerable media coverage and about 30,000 visits a month to the Age Positive website www.agepositive.gov.uk.

From spring 1997 to spring 2002, our policies have helped increase the employment rate for people aged 50 to state pension age from over 64 per cent. to over 68 per cent. with nearly 900,000 more people aged 50 and over in work. This increase has been faster than the increase in the overall employment rate. Under New Deal 50 plus 92,000 people aged over 50 have moved off benefits and gone back to work from April 2000 to December 2002, claiming the programme's cash employment credit. We will build on this support to further increase the employment rate of older workers who have a wealth of skills and experience that can benefit individual businesses and the economy as a whole.

Benefits (Hospital Stays)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate for the next three years the number of people in receipt of retirement benefit and likely to benefit from recent changes in the hospital downrating provisions who will be affected by withdrawal of (a) attendance allowance and (b) other benefits because of hospital stays of below 13 weeks. [101725]

Mr. McCartney: The total number of people affected by suspensions over a given year are not available. The forecast number of cases affected by hospital suspensions at a particular point in time are given in the following table.

Year	AA	DLA
2002–03	14,000	2,000
2003–04	14,000	2,000
2004–05	14,000	2,000
2005–06	15,000	2,000

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 1,000.
2. Based on 5 per cent. extracts taken from the November 2002, 5 per cent. extracts from the DLA and AA computer systems, and 1999 Hospital Episodes Statistics.
3. Caseloads projected in line with forecasts for the pre-budget report.

Child Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to backdate eligibility for the child maintenance disregard for parents with care to the original planned implementation date of the new child support computer system; and if he will make a statement. [97102]

Malcolm Wicks: None.

Laptop Computers

Dr. Vincent Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many laptop computers were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1995; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; what their cost was; and if he will make a statement. [98701]

Malcolm Wicks: The Table is a summary of the information available relating to laptops. Information is not available in the form requested. Such information that is recorded centrally relates specifically to theft.

Year	Ministers and Advisors	Officials	Total	Number stolen	Percentage of total	Total value (£000)

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the estimated take-up rate for the minimum income guarantee is in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [102588]

Mr. McCartney: The information requested is not available.

The latest available estimate of take-up of Minimum Income Guarantee relates to financial year 1999–2000 and is presented in the report "Income Related Benefits: Estimates of Take Up in 1999–2000". A copy of the publication is available in the Library. The next edition of the report containing statistics for 2000–01 will be released on 27 March 2003.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. John MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how the combination of letters and numbers in national insurance numbers are arrived at. [103072]

Malcolm Wicks [holding answer 14 March 2003]: The current system of National Insurance number prefixes was introduced through the departmental central index (DCI) in 1988.

A National Insurance number (NINO) consists of a two letter prefix followed by six numbers between 0 and 9, and a one letter suffix.There is no particular reason for the format of a particular NINO, nor does it carry any particular meaning. Only the first two prefixes, provide an indication of when the number was created. The number itself bears no relation to the individual it is allocated to and contains no geographical or personal significance. Allocations are made on a last digit numerical sequence (e.g. AB000001A would be followed by AB000002A).

Certain letters, such as D, F and I are not used as there is the potential for confusion with other letters if badly formed. Likewise, the letter O is not used as the second letter as it might be confused with the number 0 (zero).

Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions officials from his Department have had with (a) the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority and (b) representatives of the Pensions industry concerning revisions of rules regarding members leaving occupational pension schemes. [102586]

Mr. McCartney: We were aware of the temporary measure outlined by the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority in update 1 pending changes to the regulations relating to the calculation of transfer values. The proposed amendments to those regulations were prompted by representations from the pensions industry, Faculty and Institute of Actuaries and the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when revised rules introduced by the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority, regarding members leaving occupational pension schemes, will come into force; and how long they will remain in force. [102587]

Mr. McCartney: The Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra) are not introducing any changes to the rules regarding members leaving pension schemes. However, they have indicated that they do not intend to sanction trustees who, acting on the advice of scheme actuary, delay quoting transfer value to protect the interests of remaining members. Opra have stressed that this is a temporary measure until amendments to the Transfer Value regulations come into force. Views are currently being sought on the amendments. The consultation period ends on 28 March and we will seek to bring these changes into force as soon as possible once responses have been considered and any necessary redrafting in the light of them completed.

Overseas Trips

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his Ministerial team in 2002; and what the (a) purpose and (b) cost was in each case. [101490]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Pension Forecasts

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many reassessments have been requested in each of the last five years for which figures are available to pension entitlement on the basis of (a) pensions forecasts provided on request and (b) pension forecasts sent out automatically prior to retirement; and what proportion of those receiving forecasts this represents. [99956]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what additional information is made available to individuals requesting a pension forecast more than six months before reaching pensionable age compared with those who receive the standard notification, About your Retirement Pension prior to retirement. [99960]

Mr. McCartney: There are two different notices available for issue to individuals regarding their retirement pension. One notice is issued automatically four months before retirement to advise people of their likely pension entitlement. The second notice is issued on request to people of working age to help inform their pension planning.

A letter entitled "About your Retirement Pension" is issued approximately four months prior to the customer attaining pension age. This contains provisional rates of the customer's individual pension components based on the National Insurance contribution information available at that time. The annual process required to collect National Insurance contributions and post them to the National Insurance Recording System means that in a number of cases details covering the final income tax year are not available when the provisional rates are issued. Where an Occupational Pension is involved, details are required from the employer or pension provider before the Additional Pension component can be calculated. There are occasions when this information is not available when the provisional rates are issued.

The second notification—the Retirement Pension Forecast for people of working age—gives a full breakdown of qualifying years for basic pension. It explains how to achieve the maximum state pension by paying voluntary contributions/arrears in the last six years if necessary, including a break down of Additional Pension and Contracted Out Deductions amounts and information on how it has been worked out. Where appropriate, it informs the customer of occasions where Home Responsibilities Protection has been applied. Further, in divorced and widowed cases, the forecast shows where a spouse's contributions have been used to calculate an individual's likely state pension. All the information used is exact information on state pension at "today's" rates based on current national insurance record(s) at the time the forecast is provided.

In addition, the forecast of expected state pension at retirement age is provided. This is a projection based on the same, current record(s), which assumes that contributions will continue at the same level. Further information is supplied in the BR19L leaflet that is sent out with the forecast, it provides the customer all the extra information they need to decide on the best way to achieve the best Pension available to them.

The purpose of providing the calculation at "today's" rates and at retirement age is to provide information to individuals to help inform their pension planning and enable them to make informed choices with regard to their retirement income levels.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects the Occupational Pension Schemes (Transfer Values) (Amendment) Regulations 2003 to be laid before Parliament; and what steps he has taken to ensure that the interim regime adopted under Update 1—Calculation and payment of cash equivalent transfer values, issued by the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority, is as brief as possible. [102444]

Mr. McCartney: Amendments to pensions regulations must be issued in draft for consultation. The draft Occupational Pension Schemes (Transfer Values) (Amendment) Regulations 2003 were issued for consultation on 28 January and responses required by 28 March. We will endeavour to bring these changes into effect as soon as possible after responses have been considered and any necessary redrafting in the light of them completed.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps he has taken since the publication of "Update 1—Calculation and payment of cash equivalent transfer values" by the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority to (a) ensure that pension scheme members' rights under the (i) Pension Schemes Act 1993 and (ii) Pensions Act 1995 are protected, (b) monitor the numbers and circumstances of scheme members whose position may be adversely affected by the OPRA guidance and (c) ensure that the consultation being carried out in respect of the draft Occupational Pension Schemes (Transfer Values) (Amendment) Regulations 2003 is not prejudiced by OPRA's interim guidance pending the proposed introduction of the regulations; and if he will make a statement. [102472]

Mr. McCartney: The aim of both update 1 and the amendments to the regulations is to maintain fairness between those who transfer out of schemes and those who remain. Reports in the press imply that the measures would lock individuals into their pension schemes. That is not true.

The Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (OPRA) will not be preventing members from transferring out of pension schemes, nor are they endorsing such an approach. OPRA have made it clear that it is up to trustees to decide whether to delay quotes of transfer values. In doing so trustees will want to take into account the funding position of the scheme and the effect of transfers on members who remain in the scheme. The measures are short term and will only apply until the amended regulations come into force.

There is no central record of members who apply for a transfer value and it is therefore not possible to monitor those who may be affected by OPRA's guidance. It is important that the calculation of transfer values is fair to all, to those who leave and those who stay. If a scheme is underfunded and an unreduced transfer value is taken, it affects all members who remain in the scheme. On the whole, it is likely that more members will benefit from OPRA's measures than be adversely affected.

The timing and process of the consultation on the regulations is not affected by OPRA's interim guidance; how respondents reply to the consultation is of course a matter for them.

Pensions

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps he is taking to prevent delays when the Pension Service start supplying local authorities with the assessed income figure for claimants. [100747]

Mr. McCartney: From 6 October 2003, the existing electronic interface between The Pension Service and almost all local authorities will be enhanced to include the Pension Credit assessed income figure. For those local authorities without electronic interface, information will be passed from The Pension Service to the local authority by paper. This information will normally be supplied to the local authorities within 24 hours of the award or change of award decision for Pension Credit being made.

Officials are in regular contact with the Local Authority Associations on the arrangements for Pension Credit and have conducted a series of national seminars for local authorities. In addition, a Pension Credit Handbook for all local authorities and their software suppliers is being produced.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what the average contribution of SERPS per recipient as an addition to the basic state pension has been in each year since 1990; [99153]

(2) what proportion of those retiring in each year since 1990 have retired with both the basic state pension and SERPS. [99154]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available prior to 1995. However, such information in respect of those in receipt of a State Pension is set out in the following tables:

Pensioners (North Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent steps he has taken to improve the financial position of pensioners in North Yorkshire. [102637]

Mr. McCartney: Over 14,000 people in North Yorkshire benefit from the Minimum Income Guarantee and receive an average £43.08 a week. 116,200 pensioners have benefited from the above inflation increases in the State Pension. Additionally 128,240 received a Winter Fuel Payment of up to £200. Those pensioners in North Yorkshire eligible for Pension Credit stand to gain around £400 a year on average.

The creation of The Pension Service provides an ideal opportunity to further encourage pensioners to take up their entitlements. Not only are our customers being encouraged to claim when they ring their pension centre but we also have a network of local service teams throughout the country actively encouraging take up.

There is a local service team of 10 staff covering the area of York and Selby, meeting customers in the community and actively encouraging take-up. They are developing advice and drop-in surgeries in partnership with other local organisations. For example, appointment surgeries at York District Hospital; a drop-in surgery held at the Guildhall, York, for an event in partnership with the Primary Care Trust and Staywarm as part of the 'Keep Warm Campaign', and a drop-in surgery used for a Winter Fuel event in partnership with the Energy Efficiency Unit.

Smoking

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will introduce a levy on employers who permit smoking in the workplace. [99330]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: There are no current plans to do so. However, all employers have a duty under the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to protect the health, safety and welfare of their employees, and this duty includes any risks arising from passive smoking.

More specifically, the Workplace (Health Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 require employers to protect non-smokers from discomfort caused by tobacco smoke in rest rooms and rest areas. This means that employers must either provide separate rest rooms/areas for smokers and non smokers or prohibit smoking in rest rooms/areas.

The Health and Safety Executive has published free guidance which gives advice to employers on introducing effective smoking policies in the workplace.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by the Department; what their scope was; when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102050]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created on 29 May 2002. Since then, the Office has promoted the following awards:

The Beacon Council Scheme to identify excellence in local government and enable best practice to be shared with others. Ministers award beacon status annually on the basis of a rigorous assessment and recommendations from an independent Advisory Panel. Participating authorities are informed approximately one week before the results are made public. The Beacon authorities are generally announced in April each year and all local authorities in England, and a range of other interested parties, are notified of the results at this time.

The Green Flag Award Scheme recognises parks and green spaces that are managed and maintained to a high standard. The Green Pennant is awarded for good standards in green spaces that are managed by community and voluntary groups. Both awards are made annually. Participants are notified in confidence in the summer to allow for preparation of the announcements at the awards ceremonies in November.

The Award for Urban Renaissance for urban regeneration initiatives in England with a record of success was launched in 2002. The finalists were advised prior to the Urban Summit and the overall winner was announced at the Summit on 31 October 2002. A press notice was issued, the outcome was reported by live webcast on the Urban Summit website and brochures were distributed. The award has been renamed the Deputy Prime Minister's Award for Sustainable Communities with the intention that it will be an annual award. The scope of the award has been extended to align with "Sustainable Communities: Building for the Future" and the broader aim of the Office.

The award for Outstanding Achievement in Social Housing at the Chartered Institute of Housing's National Housing Awards. The award celebrates excellence in the provision and delivery of social housing in the United Kingdom. The criteria is that the winning award should be innovative, inspirational, provide real benefits to customers and can be easily duplicated. All award winners are announced at the awards ceremony in the autumn.

The award for Social Housing Provider of the Year. Building Magazine's Building Homes Quality Awards are designed to recognise and reward house building organisations from both the public and private sectors, focussing attention on the very best examples of construction and customer care best practice. All award winners are announced at the awards ceremony in the autumn.

The Association for Geographic Information Annual Central Government Award for best use of geographic information. The awards are presented at the annual Association for Geographic Information (AGI) Annual General Meeting and Awards dinner which was held last year on 14 November 2002. The request for nominations is made in advance to members of the AGI and the Intra Governmental Group on Geographic Information (IGGI). The unsuccessful nominees are informed after the awards dinner and details are posted on the AGI website.

Council Elections

Mr. Stephen Byers: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister in which years no elections have been held in (a) London councils, (b) shire counties, (c) shire districts, (d) metropolitan councils and (e) new unitary authorities in the last decade. [103362]

Mr. Leslie: Whole council elections are held every four years in all county councils in England, borough councils in London and about two-thirds of non-metropolitan district councils, including some unitary authorities. In the last decade these elections were held in 1994, 1998 and 2002 for London boroughs; in 1993, 1997 and 2001 for shire counties; and in 1995, 1999 and on 1 May 2003 for district councils.

The remaining third of non-metropolitan district councils, including some unitary authorities and all the metropolitan district councils have elections of one third of their councillors in each of the three years when county council elections are not held.

By-elections can take place at any time in all categories of councils; no information is held centrally about the holding of by-elections.

Council Tax

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the cost to (a) central and (b) local government of administering council tax in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [102871]

Mr. Leslie: The cost to local authorities of collecting the council tax in England is estimated to be £319 million for the year 2002–03. The main cost to central Government is incurred by the Valuation Office Agency (VOA) which administers the council tax valuation list and is a party to appeals. The VOA budget for council tax work in 2002–03 is about £14 million. Central Government also supports the costs of the independent Valuation Tribunals which hear appeals. The part of the Valuation Tribunals budget for 2002–03 relating to council tax work is approximately £0.7 million. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is responsible for the policy and legislation rather than the administration of council tax.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the total level of council tax raised in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03 in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [102875]

Mr. Leslie: The total level of council tax collected by local authorities in England in respect of 2001–02 during 2001–02 was £12.8 billion. This figure represents 96.1 per cent. of the £13.4 billion collectable.

The figures for level of council tax collected in England in 2002–03 are not yet available.

Figures for Wales and Scotland are the responsibility of the Welsh Assembly Government and the Scottish Parliament respectively.

Council tax does not exist in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what has been (a) the average Council tax increase and (b) the level of local government settlement in each of the last 10 years in (i) inner London councils, (ii) outer London councils, (iii) shire counties, (iv) shire districts, (v) metropolitan councils and (vi) new unitary authorities. [103363]

[1] This is the increase in council tax assumed in the calculation of revenue support grant, calculated on a like-for-like basis. It does not represent an estimate of the level at which local authorities need to set their council tax. The Government does not estimate the level of council tax increases. Figures are not readily available by class of authority, or for England before 1997–98. Under the new formula grant system, the figure for 2003–04 is for the increase in assumed national council tax over the equivalent figure for 2002–03.

[b] Shire unitary authorities did not exist in 1994–95 and 1995–96, other than the Isle of Wight in 1995–96, which may not be representative of the current class as a whole.

[c] A major cause of the large changes in London between 1994–95 and 1995–96 was the large reduction between the two years in the amounts of council tax transitional reduction scheme grant paid to some London boroughs.

[d] Like-for-like comparisons for shire counties in 1995–96 and for unitary authorities in 1996–97 are not available due to local government reorganisation. This is also true to a more limited extent for shire counties, districts and unitaries between 1995–96 and 1998–99, for which figures are generally given.

[e] not yet available.

NDC is a 10-year programme with a total funding allocation of £2 billion. There are 17 NDCs in round 1 which received allocations for programme delivery from 2000–01 and 22 NDCs in round 2 which received allocations for programme delivery from 2001–02. There are no branches of NDC. The allocations for all NDCs were as follows:

Single Regeneration Budget (SRB)

1,027 regeneration schemes were successful under the six rounds of the Single Regeneration Budget. Over £5.7 billion of SRB funding was allocated over their lifetime of up to seven years. The names of the schemes with lifetime funding, by each round have been tabled in the House of Commons Library.

Local strategic partnerships (LSPs)

The 2002 survey of all English principle local authority areas found that as of summer 2002 there were:

294 LSPs in operation

35 partnerships functioning as LSPs (though not formally an LSP)

39 LSPs in the process of being formed

1 local authority area with no plans to form an LSP

All LSPs operate on a voluntary basis and are not formally accountable public bodies. Hence, for the most part they cannot receive direct government funding. For instance, the neighbourhood renewal fund is allocated to the local authority but they must collaborate with the LSP to agree how it is spent.

Homelessness

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 19 December 2002, Official Report, column 954W, on homelessness, what proportion of lettings were made available to homeless households in priority need by (a) local authorities and (b) registered social landlords in each Government Office Region in (i) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02. [102310]

Mr. McNulty: A further version of the table previously placed in the Library of the House (December 2002), updating data reported for 2000–01 and presenting equivalent data for 2001–02, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many households are in rented accommodation in each local authority; and what proportion are in accommodation provided by registered social landlords. [102688]

Mr. McNulty: A table with estimates of the number of households in rented accommodation in each local authority, and the percentage which are in accommodation provided by registered social landlords as at April 2001, has been placed in the Library of the House.

Iraq

Mr. Webb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the discussions which he has had with fire service (a) employers and (b) unions on contingency plans in the event of a conflict in Iraq and the suspension of (i) action under the current dispute and (ii) proposed changes in working practices. [103470]

Mr. Raynsford: My right. hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has been available to talk to all sides since this dispute began and has met both the employers and the Fire Brigade union on a number of occasions. He has undertaken to keep the House informed of developments.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which regional bodies to which he makes appointments; and which regional bodies require funding through grants from local authorities. [102173]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister makes appointments to the five regional Rent Assessment Panels.

It is a matter for local authorities who they choose to support through grants.

Public Sector Pension Schemes

Mr. Heald: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the local authority public sector pension schemes which are funded; when was the last actuarial valuation of each scheme; what the value was of the assets at the last actuarial valuation of each scheme; and what deficit is disclosed by the last actuarial valuation of each scheme. [103347]

Mr. Leslie: The Local Government Pension Scheme (LGPS) is the only funded local authority pension scheme in England and Wales. It is a centrally regulated scheme but is managed and administered locally, in the main, by 86 separate local pension fund authorities who are responsible also for their individual pension funds. The most recent triennial valuation exercise was concluded in 2001. Then, total assets were valued at £85.3 billion with liabilities amounting to £91.5 billion. All the LGPS funds met the specific requirements of the Scheme's regulations concerning solvency, in particular, the need to maintain as constant a rate of employers' contributions as possible.

Regional Governance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will publish the results from the soundings exercise on the level of interest in each English region in holding a referendum about establishing an elected regional assembly. [103266]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government propose to explain to Parliament their choice of region or regions to undergo a local government review, with a view to holding a referendum, and to publish a summary of the views received during the soundings. We will announce our decision when the Regional Assemblies (Reparations) Bill has received Royal Assent.

Some respondents may request that their response remain confidential. In this instance, such a response would still be included in any numerical analysis of responses, but would not be attributed to the respondent in the summary analysis.

Right to Buy

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many properties have been sold under the Right to Buy; how many have been sold under Right to Buy in the last three years; how many households are supported in temporary accommodation; and how many new units of social housing have been completed, in the last three years, in each local authority in London. [96896]

Mr. McNulty: Information reported by London boroughs has been placed in the Library of the House.

Matthew Green: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the discounts to be paid under the Right to Buy scheme in the financial year 2002–03; and what financial provision he has made. [102634]

Mr. McNulty: The Right to Buy scheme allows tenants to purchase their homes at less than market value, but this does not involve any additional capital expenditure by the authority. The discount represents a reduction in the authority's capital receipt, 75 per cent. of which under current regulations has to be set aside for debt redemption or paying off credit arrangements. The accumulated balance of usable receipts may then, at the authority's discretion, be used to support their housing capital programme.

In the period April to September 2002, it is estimated that the value of discounts allowed through right to buy sales in England was some £657 million. The market value of the estimated 27,800 sales in the period was about £1,584 million.

South West Regional Development Agency

Mr. Adrian Flook: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister to which bodies the South West Regional Development Agency is accountable. [103059]

Alan Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The south west of England Regional Development Agency is accountable to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and to Parliament. Under the terms of the Regional Development Agencies Act, 1998, the Agency must also take account of the views of the South West Regional Assembly, which has been formally designated as the regional chamber for the Agency. For the purposes of regional accountability, the Agency is also required to hold a public meeting following publication of its annual report.

Telecommunications Operators (Regulation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of telecommunication operators' implementation of their Ten Best Practice Commitments; and if he will make a statement. [102093]

Mr. McNulty: The Mobile Operators Association have commissioned Deloitte and Touche to carry out an independent review of the implementation of the Operators Ten Commitments. The results of the review will be publicly available in due course.

Use Classes Orders

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to the written ministerial statement on the use classes orders, 4 March, Official Report, column 79WS, what further consultation will take place when the Government announce their intentions for A1 uses arising from the use classes consultation in 2002. [103002]

Mr. McNulty: Following the publication of the consultation document on the "Use Classes Order" in January 2002 there was a three-month period during which representations could be made. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister received over 2,600 replies from a wide range of interested parties. Since then the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has been considering the responses received. A decision about whether there is a need for any further consultation will be made once conclusions have been reached on the review.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proposals he has to create a buffer zone between on-shore wind turbines and domestic properties. [102401]

Mr. McNulty: The annex on Wind Energy in Policy Planning Guidance Note 22 contains guidelines about various factors which should be taken into consideration in relation to wind turbine location, including suggestions about turbine separation distances from residential dwellings, specifically in relation to noise. As indicated in the recent Energy White Paper, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently reviewing PPG22.

TRANSPORT

A696

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in opposition to the de-trunking of the A696 in Northumberland; and if he will hold a public enquiry into the proposal. [102843]

Mr. Spellar: Initially 11 objections to the draft orders published on 23 August 2001 were received from Northumberland County Council, Tynedale District Council, Scottish Executive, Northumberland National Park, Freight Transport Association, five parish councils and a private individual. Tynedale District Council, Scottish Executive and Freight Transport Association subsequently withdrew their Objections.

Negotiations continue with Northumberland County Council, which will be the highway authority after detrunking, over the future funding of the A696/A68 and it would therefore be premature of me to comment on whether there will be a public inquiry into the proposal before these discussions are concluded.

Amber Beacons

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on restrictions on the use of flashing amber beacons on motor vehicles on the public highway; what plans he has to change the regulations; and if he will make a statement. [103476]

Mr. Spellar: The Department of Transport regularly receives requests for clarification of the regulations on the use of flashing amber beacons on motor vehicles. In the past five years only one request has been made for these regulations to be extended. This was to permit amber warning beacons to be fitted to vehicles which are used for the purposes of rescuing animals injured on the roads, as they sometimes need to stop on the highway.

A consultation exercise is currently being carried out on proposals to permit recovery operators to use red rear flashing lights in conjunction with amber beacons at the scene of a breakdown.

The Government has no immediate plans for any further amendments to the regulations on amber beacons on road vehicles.

Motorised Wheelchairs

Mr. Robert Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he intends to publish the findings of his Department's review of the use of motorised wheelchairs on the highway; [103736]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a requirement in law for compulsory third party insurance for users of motorised wheelchairs; and if he will make a statement; [103640]

(3) what representations his Department has received from (a) pedestrians and (b) motorists on the unsafe and dangerous use of motorised wheelchairs; and if he will make a statement. [103639]

Mr. Jamieson: We receive a wide range of correspondence about the use of motorised wheelchairs on the highway from disabled people themselves as well as from other pedestrians and motorists. A proportion of that correspondence is expressing concern about safety issues.

In response to these concerns I will shortly be launching a review of the law which currently governs the construction of these vehicles and their use on the highway. The review will cover the full range of issues that have been raised with the Department, including the case for compulsory insurance for the users of motorised wheelchairs. We will be seeking the views of users and all other stakeholders before drawing any conclusions about possible changes to current arrangements.

I will publish the results of the Review once it is complete, which I would hope to be later this year.

Motorways

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many additional miles of motorway in England and Wales he expects to have lighting (a) by December 2003 and (b) by December 2004. [102815]

Mr. Spellar: Motorways in Wales are the responsibility of the Minister for the Environment at the National Assembly for Wales.

In England, the Highways Agency expects to install lighting on approximately 10.8 miles of existing motorway by December 2003 and a further 14.5 miles by December 2004.

The new M6 toll motorway will be open by December 2004 and will have lighting on lengths totalling approximately 10 miles.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of changes in the number of injury-accidents occurring after introduction of driving on the hard shoulder; [102220]

(2) what guidance he has (a) sought and (b) received from the Health and Safety Executive on the proposal to permit the use of motorway hard shoulders as a running lane; [102219]

(3) what steps he has taken to gauge the opinion of motorists on the proposal to remove the hard shoulder on many motorways; [102221]

(4) what estimate he has made of the (a) construction and (b) maintenance costs associated with the introduction of driving on hard shoulders; [102218]

(5) what plans he has to permit use of hard shoulders as a running lane; and if he will make a statement; [102213]

(6) what assessment he has made of the safety implications of using the hard shoulder as a running lane; [102214]

(7) what meetings he has had with motoring organisations to discuss the safety implications of the proposal to remove the hard shoulder on many motorways; and what responses he had (a) in favour and (b) opposed; [102224]

(8) what guidance he has (a) sought and (b) received from the Fire Service on the proposal to permit the use of motorway hard shoulders as a running lane; [102223]

(9) what estimate he has made of the costs to public funds as a result of a change in the number of accidents caused by driving on the hard shoulder, with particular regard to (a) insurance, (b) medical costs, (c) care of dependants and (d) time off work; [102225]

(10) what meetings he has had with (a) the Transport and General Workers Union and (b) other trade unions, to discuss the safety implications of driving on hard shoulders for those who work at the roadside; [102222]

(11) if he will place in the Library copies of research he has assessed in relation to his policy regarding use of hard shoulders as a running lane; [102216]

(12) if he will commit the Department to retaining the existing hard shoulder network for the purpose for which it was intended. [102215]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State announced on 27 July 2001 that the M42 between Junctions 3a and 7 had been chosen as a pilot site for Active Traffic Management (ATM). The pilot offers the potential to allow carefully controlled use of the hard shoulder as a running lane during congested periods. The outcome of the pilot will be assessed very thoroughly before any policy decision is taken about the more general use of the hard shoulder as a running lane. The hard shoulder is routinely used as a running lane during motorway maintenance.

The Health and Safety Executive regularly provide input into the standards applied when the hard shoulder is used as a running lane during motorway maintenance. They will be consulted about its use as part of the M42 ATM Project when the Highways Agency has developed its proposals more fully.

The Highways Agency has met with and discussed the proposals for the M42 ATM with the local fire service. There is a programme of ongoing liaison with the emergency services to discuss matters in more detail.

The Highways Agency has arranged a number of exhibitions and local presentations and has generally received favourable feedback on the proposals to use the hard shoulder as a running lane on the M42. As part of this assessment a range of surveys will be undertaken to assess motorists' opinions on the scheme. A driver simulator has also been developed and this was displayed at the 2002 Birmingham International Motor Show. Again, a favourable response to the use of the hard shoulder was received.

The controlled use of the hard shoulder in the M42 ATM Project is not expected to result in an increase in the costs to the public funds with regard to insurance, medical costs, care of dependants or time off work. Extensive monitoring as part of the M42 ATM Project will be undertaken to quantify the actual impact of the scheme. The proposals are subject to an ongoing assessment and safety audits have already been undertaken as part of the design process.

The proposal for use of the hard shoulder under controlled motorway conditions on the M42 is being designed with safety in mind. Hard shoulder running will only be allowed when a lower speed limit is in place and control room staff have ensured that the hard shoulder is clear. There will be emergency refuge areas, equipped with emergency roadside telephones, installed at regular intervals for motorists that breakdown or require assistance.

I have asked the Highways Agency to place in the Library copies of the reports, listed as follows, that have been assessed in relation to the use of the hard shoulder as a running lane.

(a) Safety Review of Making Better Use Techniques—Final Report.

(b) PR/T/168/2001 Development of the Candidate Operational Regimes and the Assessment Strategy for the M42 Active Traffic Management (ATM) Project—Review of innovative schemes for lane, speed and incident management.

(c) PR/T/019/2002 Development of the Candidate Operational Regimes and the Assessment Strategy for the M42 ATM pilot Project—M42 ATM Pilot CORE Proposals.

(d) 42691/03A/012—Operational Team Visit to Utrecht Traffic Information Centre.

It is not envisaged that there will be an increase in the injury accident rate through the controlled use of the hard shoulder for the M42 ATM project. Extensive monitoring of the M42 project will be undertaken to quantify the actual impact of the scheme on safety. The safety of drivers and those concerned with the operation and maintenance of the road will be a major consideration.

The Highways Agency is in the process of discussions with various motoring organisations about different aspects proposed for the M42 pilot. These discussions are on-going.

The M42 ATM Project has received initial funding of £40 million from the Capital Modernisation Fund to cover the ATM infrastructure construction costs. An initial estimate of £3.2 million per annum was made for the future maintenance and operational costs for the project.

No meetings have yet been held with the Transport and General Workers Union or other trade unions to discuss the safety implications of hard shoulder running in general or on the M42 ATM Project. The advanced signalling and monitoring equipment being installed on the M42 will provide the ability to close lanes and provide advanced warning of incidents on the M42. This infrastructure will allow the protection of road users involved in incidents and will support existing maintenance activities which is likely to be especially beneficial in reducing risk to traffic management operatives.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Conservative Party

Mr. Tyler: To ask the President of the Council pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cannock Chase (Tony Wright), of 11 March 2003, Official Report, column 156W, if he will list the individual sums of public money paid for (a) salaries, listing the offices held, (b) expenses and (c) Short money; and what the value was of services in kind to the Conservative Party since 1997. [103339]

Mr. Bradshaw: The scheme for financial assistance to opposition parties (Short money) provides funding for three purposes:

- to assist an opposition party in carrying out its parliamentary business;
- for the running costs of the office of the Leader of the Opposition
- for the opposition parties' travel and associated expenses.

The amounts received under these three headings were as follows:

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by the Department; what their scope was when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102064]

Peter Hain: None.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of his Department's spending on (a) consultants, (b) advertising and consultancy, (c) travel and (d) conferences in each year from 1999–2000 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [90357]

Peter Hain: My Department was created on 1 July 1999. Figures for 1999/2000 are not readily available in the format requested.

(a) for spending on consultants, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 March 2003, Official Report, column 249W.

(b) for spending on advertising I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor gave the hon. Member for Buckingham on 15 April 2002, Official Report, column 750W.

(c) total expenditure on travel, excluding payments to the Government Car and Despatch Agency, was £86,000 in 2000–01; £105,233 in 2001–02; and has been £121,000 in 2002–03 to date.

(d) there is no separately recorded expenditure on conferences in any year.

Fiscal Balance

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the fiscal surplus or deficit was in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available. [89825]

Peter Hain: No official figure for the fiscal deficit/surplus in Wales has been calculated in recent years.

Overseas Trips

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team in 2002; and what the (a) purpose and (b) cost was in each case. [101484]

Peter Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W, in response to a similar question from the Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws).

Special Advisers

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103599]

Peter Hain: None.

University Students

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many university students his Department has supported or sponsored with a work placement in the last year; what his policy is on work placements; what plans he has to develop such schemes; and what his policy is on paying their university fees. [98538]

Peter Hain: The staff of the Wales Office are secondees from other Government Departments and in particular the National Assembly for Wales. The Assembly has an annual scheme which offers opportunities to students as well as work placements.

Whole of Government Accounts

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what impact the Whole of Government Accounts project has had on Wales. [103371]

Peter Hain: The introduction of Whole of Government Accounts (WGA) will assist in ensuring that best practice accounting methods are used to construct accounts covering the public sector as a whole, and that fiscal reporting is as transparent as possible. Central Government Accounts (CGA) are the first step towards WGA.

The Treasury has planned to produce 'dry-run' CGA for 2001–02 and 2002–03, with the first CGA published for 2003–04. The Wales Office and the National Assembly for Wales are part of this process.

Both the Wales Office and National Assembly for Wales have produced consolidation information for the first dry run year. The Assembly's 'consolidation group' currently includes the Assembly itself, its agencies, the Health Authorities in Wales, Estyn and the Assembly Sponsored Public Bodies.

In future years the project will be extended to include NHS Trusts and local authorities. The Assembly is co-funding a project with the Treasury to examine the issues involved in consolidating local authority accounts in Wales.

In addition to CGA the Assembly will produce a 'Whole of Government of Wales Account' to the same timetable. This account will include bodies designated for inclusion in CGA plus the 'Wales elements' of certain cross-border authorities like the Forestry Commission in Wales.

DEFENCE

Allied Harmony Operation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in implementing the common action for an EU military mission to take over from NATO's Allied Harmony operation in FYROM; which (a) European states that are not yet EU members and (b) other third countries have expressed the intention of taking part in that mission; what NATO assets the EU will use for that mission; whether the launching of this operation depends on finalising permanent arrangements for the EU's use of NATO assets; when those arrangements are expected to be finalised; and if he will make a statement. [102671]

Mr. Hoon: The "Berlin Plus" arrangements for ready access by the European Union to the collective assets and capabilities of NATO are now in place.

Good progress has been made on the Council's Joint Action on the EU military operation in Macedonia. For example, the EU has agreed that the Deputy Supreme Allied Commander for Europe will be appointed as the EU Operation Commander and that the Supreme Headquarters of Allied Powers in Europe will be used as the EU Operational Headquarters. Arrangements with third states have been agreed and a Committee of Contributors has been formed. The Operation Plan has been finalised, subject to approval by the Council. As envisaged, contacts and meetings between the EU and NATO have been stepped up.

The non-EU European states that are expected to take part in the operation are Bulgaria, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Romania, Slovak Republic, Slovenia, Czech Republic, Poland, Iceland, Turkey, Hungary and Norway. Canada is also expected to take part.

NATO has drawn up an indicative list of those assets that will be available for the EU-led operation in Macedonia, and the EU is expected to place a formal request for the assets that it wishes to use in the very near future.

Chartered Ships

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special measures are being taken to vet the crews of ships chartered by his Department from overseas countries where there are security considerations. [103638]

Mr. Ingram: It is not possible to vet the crews of commercial ships chartered from overseas countries, due to a combination of circumstances which include: non-residency in the United Kingdom, the rapid turn-over of crew members and the short notice nature of the Ministry of Defence charter requirements. Special measures are taken when there are security considerations and these can include the placing of a UK military escort party on-board chartered commercial ships.

Civil Defence

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimates the Government have made regarding the number of military personnel required to provide support to the civil authorities in response to a large scale (a) conventional and (b) chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear attack on the UK. [103410]

Mr. Ingram: The primary responsibility for handling the consequences of any attack in the United Kingdom lies with the emergency services. The nature of any request they might make for military assistance will be determined by the type, scale, impact and location of the attack and the availability of civil resources. It is therefore not possible to make a specific estimate of the level of military support that might be requested. Information on the contingency plans for specialist Armed Forces responses to terrorist attacks is classified and details are therefore being withheld under Exemption la of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which Department's budget the cost of (a) creation, (b) maintenance and (c) deployment of the civil contingency reaction forces will be taken. [103411]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence budget will bear the cost of establishing and maintaining the civil contingency reaction forces. The treatment of the costs of deployments will be determined case by case under existing arrangements in the same way as other military assistance to the civil authorities.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the estimated cost is of (a) creating and (b) maintaining the civil contingency reaction force. [103412]

Mr. Ingram: The annual cost of maintaining the 14 civil contingency reaction forces will be some £4.5 million. This comprises the costs of the 406 new Volunteer Reserve posts established within the parent Territorial Army Infantry battalions to support the administration and training of the civil contingency reaction forces, and of the additional man-training days allocated to existing Volunteer Reserve personnel who volunteer for the CCRF role in addition to their current roles.

Start-up costs are estimated to be some £2 million in 2002–03.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many joint regional liaison officers have been created since July 2002 to act as a single point of liaison between civil authorities and the armed forces on emergency planning matters. [103407]

Mr. Ingram: 22 Joint Regional Liaison Officer posts have been established as part of the SDR New Chapter measures to enhance the Armed Forces' capability to respond to requests for assistance from local authorities and emergency services. These measures were announced in the House on 31 October 2002.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many more civil contingency reaction forces are planned. [103408]

Mr. Ingram: The establishment of fourteen Civil Contingency Reaction Forces was announced in the House on 31 October 2002.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists are deployed in civil contingency reaction forces. [103409]

Mr. Ingram: None of the 14 Civil Contingency Reaction Forces has yet been deployed.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals there are to commit units and assets from the regular armed forces to home defence. [103413]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence is responsible for the defence of the United Kingdom from military attack, including air defence. The lead responsibility for security within the UK, including the response to the activities of terrorist groups, rests with the Home Office and the police. However, where appropriate, the Ministry of Defence responds positively to requests for military assistance from civil authorities, drawing on available resources. Although fluctuations do occur, a significant number of military personnel are stationed in the UK at any one time and we are also establishing a capability in the Reserve Forces to undertake military assistance.

EU Operations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the main features are of the EU/NATO arrangements for EU access to NATO capabilities for EU-led operations; how they differ from the agreement concluded between WEU and NATO; and if he will make a statement. [102676]

Mr. Hoon: At the NATO summit at Washington in 1999, the Alliance declared that it stood ready to "define and adopt the necessary arrangements for ready access by the European Union to the collective assets and capabilities of the Alliance, for operations in which the Alliance as a whole is not engaged militarily as an Alliance". The main features of the arrangements, known as "Berlin Plus", are assured EU access to NATO operational planning capabilities, and a presumption of availability to the EU of pre-identified NATO capabilities and common assets for use in EU-led operations.

The North Atlantic Council (NAC) decided on 13 December 2002 that assured EU access to NATO's operational planning capabilities was effective immediately, and undertook to put in place the rest of the Berlin Plus arrangements swiftly. This has now been done.

The NATO/EU arrangements go beyond those established for the WEU in two important respects. First, because EU access to NATO operational planning is assured (i.e. continuous and guaranteed), NATO agreement is not required for any EU requests for NATO planning support; every WEU request would have required specific NAC approval. Second, there is a presumption that those NATO assets and capabilities that have been pre-identified will indeed be available to the EU. There was no such presumption under the NATO/WEU arrangements.

The implementation of the Berlin Plus arrangements is a manifestation of the genuine strategic partnership in crisis management which NATO and EU have decided to establish together.

Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his Spanish counterpart regarding the British military base on Gibraltar. [102919]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Defence Secretary has not met his Spanish counterpart formally since December 2001, nor has he had any recent discussions. However there has been some correspondence on security matters.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the British military base on Gibraltar. [102920]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Defence Secretary has had no recent discussions with Commander British Forces (CBF) Gibraltar. I visited British Forces Gibraltar in November 2002 and had extensive discussions with CBF and others.

Gulf War Syndrome

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of Gulf War veterans who are (a) receiving treatment for Gulf War syndrome, (b) have outstanding compensation claims to his Department for Gulf War syndrome and (c) have been compensated by his Department for Gulf War syndrome. [103452]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 17 March 2003]: The Ministry of Defence does not recognise "Gulf War Syndrome" as a medical condition. It accepts that some veterans of the 1990–91 Gulf Conflict have become ill and that many believe this ill health is related to their Gulf experience. A large number of multi-system, multi-organ, non-specific, medically unexplained symptoms have been reported by some Gulf veterans as well recognised medical conditions. The overwhelming consensus of the scientific and medical community is that there is insufficient evidence to enable this ill-health to be characterised as a unique illness, condition or 'syndrome'. The MOD's approach must be guided by findings from the scientific and medical community. Primary health care records for the 53, 000 or so veterans of the 1990–91 Gulf conflict are held by their doctors and are not accessible centrally for reason of patient confidentiality.

When compensation claims are submitted, they are considered on the basis of whether or not the MOD has a legal liability to pay compensation. Where there is a legal liability arising to pay compensation we do so. The MOD has received about 2,000 notices of intention to claim from Gulf veterans, and members of their families in respect of illness allegedly arising from the Gulf conflict, but no writs or formal claims have yet been received. No compensation has therefore been paid following claims for Gulf veterans' illnesses.

The fact that there is, at present, no proper basis for recognising "Gulf War Syndrome" as an appropriate diagnostic label does not prevent a Gulf veteran from getting a war pension. A war pension can be paid for any disablement provided that a causal link to Service is accepted. Over 1,200 war pensions have been awarded to Gulf veterans by the Veterans Agency.

HMS Triumph

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons HMS Triumph is being put into extended readiness in 2004; and how many fleet submarines will be operational in 2004. [102577]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Navy operates its nuclear submarine fleet under stringent safety regulations. It is planned to place HMS Triumph in a state of Extended Readiness when her reactor reaches its maximum length of service, prior to entering a refit and overhaul period that will include refuelling. It is planned that a minimum of five fleet submarines should be available in 2004 for operational tasking.

Hospitality

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what hospitality has been offered at public expense in the last 12 months, by each Minister in his Department to outside interest groups, broken down to (a) restaurant, (b) recipient and (c) cost in each case; [99501]

(2) what criteria Ministers in his Department use when determining whether to offer hospitality in restaurants to interest groups at public expense; and if he will make a statement; [99500]

(3) how often Ministers in his Department have received hospitality in restaurants from outside groups in the last 12 months. [99576]

Dr. Moonie: All offers of hospitality are made in accordance with published departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in Government Accounting. The giving and receiving of hospitality is conducted fully in accordance with the guidance set out in the Ministerial Code and Guidance on Contacts with Outside Interest Groups including Lobbyists. The detailed information requested is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Military Training Establishments

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) establishment and (b) requirement is of (i) medical officers and (ii) other medical staff in military training establishments in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [100174]

Dr. Moonie: Current establishment and manning figures for military medical officers, civilian medical practitioners, and other medical personnel at training establishments in each of the Services are as follows:

Postal Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the reasons for the reduction in the permitted weight of parcels being sent to BFPO 660; and if he will make a statement. [103171]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 17 March 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 March 2003, Official Report, column 387W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Tony Cunningham).

Research Contracts

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice his Department provides to universities and other academic research centres regarding (a) the management of defence research contracts and (b) the sharing of intellectual property. [102210]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence's approach to contracting for research is the same as that used for the other goods and services it purchases and there is no specific additional guidance on the management of defence research contracts. The MOD's general advice is freely available at http://www.dgcom.mod.uk

The MOD fully supports the HM Treasury report "Creating Knowledge, Creating Wealth" (The Baker Report, 1999). In line with the recommendations of that report, it has negotiated a new contracting standard, DEFCON 705, which vests ownership of IP with the contractor. This standard has been used for the vast majority of research contracts let by the MOD over the past 12 months.

The MOD has actively contributed to "A guide to Managing IP:—Strategic Decision Making in Universities" available at http://www.patent.gov.uk/about/ippd/bakergroup.htm and is also about to publish "Guideline for Industry No 10—The Intellectual Property Defence Conditions".

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many research contracts were placed by his Department with UK universities and other academic research centres in each of the last five years; and what their values were. [102211]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence recognises the strong science and technology capability of United Kingdom universities as a source of innovation and knowledge of relevant research in the wider non-defence community. It is for this reason that MOD encourages universities to participate in the Defence Technology Centre Scheme.

The MOD has placed almost all of its research work over the past five years with DERA and, since July 2001, with DSTL and QinetiQ. In turn these organisations have sub-contracted with academia in a manner which ensures that the Department's needs are met in an integrated and cost effective manner. MOD does not hold centrally information about the numbers of sub-contracts placed by our contractors with either academia or industry and this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information is available, however, for contracts placed directly by the Department with academia for the past four years since the decision was made to increase the level of competition for research work. To date three universities have been awarded contracts valued at £591,000. In addition 10 UK universities have received £2.619 million for their role in successful consortia bidding into the research programme. A breakdown of these figures is given in the following table.

	Prime contractor	As part of a consortium
1999	n/a	n/a
2000	266	1,200
2001	295	213
2003 to date	30	106

The MOD also seeks to further academic research by funding research jointly with the Research Councils through the Joint Grants Scheme. Details of the number of grants are given in the following table.

£000

	Number of grants	Value of grants
1999	43	5,100
2000	61	4,600
2001	41	4,650
2002	34	4,780
2003	31	5,600

Royal Marines

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the additional funding recently made available to the Royal Marines. [102921]

Mr. Ingram: Additional funding was made available to the Royal Marines to meet the additional costs necessarily incurred on Contingency Planning for possible operations against Iraq. This was contained within the £1 billion added to RfR2 Conflict Prevention at Spring Supplementary Estimates 2002–03

Satellite Centre/Institute for Security Studies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the EU's plan for strengthening the impact of the work being done by (a) the Satellite Centre and (b) the Institute for Security Studies; and if he will make a statement. [102673]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

The UK wants to see both the Satellite Centre and the Institute for Security Studies (ISS) make an effective contribution to the EU. We will consider any particular proposals put forward for the Satellite Centre. The Political and Security Committee has tasked the ISS with a work programme for 2003, reflecting the Council's priorities in external relations.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the extent is of UK military deployment to Sierra Leone and the surrounding region during 2003; what estimate he has made of the costs of this deployment; and if he will make a statement. [102942]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom has maintained a twin track strategy in Sierra Leone, supporting the UN mission and providing training, advice and assistance to the Republic of Sierra Leone Armed Forces (RSLAF) and the democratically elected Government of Sierra Leone. A United Kingdom-led International Military Advisory and Training Team (IMATT) continues to help build the RSLAF into an effective, professional and democratically accountable force. The HVLATT currently involves some 120 personnel, comprising 108 United Kingdom personnel plus a number of internationals. The annual cost of the IMATT is approximately £15 million.

To display our continued commitment to the settlement process in Sierra Leone on 21 February we deployed a Company Group from 2nd Battalion The Royal Gurkha Rifles plus HQ and supporting elements (eg logistics and medical). HMS Iron Duke and RFA Black Rover have also deployed to Sierra Leone as a further demonstration of United Kingdom commitment. The provisional costs of this deployment are in the order of £1.8 million.

There are no other United Kingdom deployments in the region, although the United Kingdom also provides the Chief Of Staff, six HQ staff officers and 15 Military Observers to the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL).

Training Exercises

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training exercises have been cancelled as a result of Operation Fresco and Operation Telic. [102571]

Mr. Ingram: Some 70 training exercises listed in the Ministry of Defence's Defence Exercise Programme (which lists some 350 exercises each year) have been cancelled as a result of Operation Fresco and Operation Telic. Information on tactical training exercises organised by the Front Line Commands, the Permanent Joint HQ, the Defence Logistic Organisation HQ and individual units is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

US Bases

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the US Government asked for permission for the US National Guard to be based at (a) RAF Mildenhall, (b) RAF Lakenheath and (c) JAC Molesworth; who gave permission; and how many US National Guard are based at each of the bases. [101689]

Mr. Ingram: The US formally advised us on 3 March of their plans to augment military guard forces at RAF Lakenheath, RAF Mildenhall, RAF Croughton and RAF Molesworth with US Army National Guardsmen. The Guardsmen arrived on 10 March, around 230 have been deployed. About 100 have been deployed to RAF Lakenheath, 60 to RAF Mildenhall, 40 to RAF Croughton and 30 to RAF Molesworth. The National Guardsmen will carry out routine access control and other guarding duties under supervision, to 'backfill' permanent security personnel who have been deployed to other duties.

Vaccines

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch), of 10 February 2003, Official Report, column 517W, on vaccines, if he will break down the figures and the percentages they represent by unit. [102806]

Dr. Moonie: I am withholding the information requested under Exemption la of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Illegally Imported Meat

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much illegally imported meat has been seized at UK ports and airports in each of the last three years, broken down by (a) type and (b) location. [102158]

Mr. Morley: A central database of illegal animal product seizures notified to Defra was set up in August 2001, with detailed data going back to April 2001. Little or no data is held centrally for 2000.

The numbers and weights of meat seizures at UK ports and airports reported to us in each of the last three years is shown below. A detailed breakdown of locations of seizures is not provided in order to protect operational details of targeted checks.

	Number of seizures	Weight of seizures (kg)
Ports
2001	404	60,544
2002	301	6,091
Airports
2001	739	14,254
2002	1953	18,593

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what arrangements there are with (a) Customs and Excise and (b) the Food Standards Agency (i) to prevent and (ii) to detect illegally imported meat entering the UK. [102159]

Mr. Morley: Currently the Port Health Authorities, Local Authorities and the State Veterinary Service lead on enforcement of controls for detecting smuggled meat. They are supported in this by Customs, who deployed extra resources in this role in 2002. Defra has been funding additional enforcement activity this financial year through temporary Local Authority staff and overtime.

Following the Cabinet Office review of enforcement structures, responsibility for all anti-smuggling activity is to be transferred to HM Customs as soon as practicable, and we are working on a Service Level Agreement. Defra has been leading on implementing the Government's action plan, including a risk assessment, detector dog pilot and design of publicity material. Customs have been providing support. A comprehensive centralised database of seizures has been set up to share information and inform decisions on the targeting of resources.

The Food Standards Agency is an independent agency accountable to an independent board, with responsibility for food safety matters. It co-ordinates the activities of Local Authorities, including Port Health Authorities, on food safety matters and has lead policy responsibility for controls at the border on products of non-animal origin and fish. The Agency is concerned with checks to verify compliance with food safety standards, and has produced a 10-point plan in relation to imported food, including illegal food imports. The Agency is also working closely with Defra on the action plan.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what resources she is committing (a) to prevent and (b) detect illegally imported meat entering the UK; [102160]

(2) what resources she is committing (a) to prevent and (b) to detect illegally imported meat entering the UK. [102161]

Mr. Morley: The Government have made available a total of £25 million over the next three financial years to tackle illegal imports from outside the European Union of any meat, other animal products and plant products. Final decisions on the allocation of this money in 2003–04 will be made shortly.

In the current financial year, additional measures have been introduced at ports and airports to tackle illegal imports. Temporary agency staff, funded by Defra, have been recruited to carry out checks to detect smuggled goods—teams of six are based at our major airports and teams of two at major seaports. We are also paying for additional checks through overtime elsewhere. Further inspection resources have also been provided through the detector dog pilot, and a publicity campaign which has targeted ports, airports and points of departure.

We expect to lay the legislation shortly, under which HM Customs will take over responsibility for detection, intelligence and enforcement with regard to illegal food imports.

Animal By-Products Regulations

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the Animal By-Products Regulation with regard to the burial of (a) domestic animals in pet cemeteries and (b) livestock in domestic locations. [102651]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 17 March 2003]: No specific assessment has been made of the burial of domestic animals in pet cemeteries and of livestock in domestic locations.

However, under a Derogation the Regulation permits the burial of any animal belonging to species normally nourished and kept, but not consumed, by humans for purposes other than farming.

The burial of livestock is not permitted.

Avian Influenza

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps farmers can take to improve biosecurity to prevent Avian Influenza. [102368]

Mr. Morley: In view of the current outbreak of Avian Influenza in the Netherlands, Defra is advising producers to take all reasonable precautions to prevent their flocks coming into contact with wild birds. The producers most at risk are those close to where wild birds congregate, such as surface water.

The poultry industry is being reminded of the need for stringent biosecurity at the present time. This includes advice on:

minimising the risk of introducing disease into their birds through faecal contamination of boots, clothing, equipment and food stores by the prudent use of disinfectants on clothing, footwear and vehicles;

ensuring that the number of staff with access to the birds is kept to a minimum and not allowing non-essential visitors in or near poultry houses; clearing up external feed spillages quickly and preventing wild birds from gaining access to poultry areas and food.

Such advice will be kept under review in the light of developments.

Biofuels

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what role biofuels will play in Government plans to address fuel poverty. [100215]

Mr. Morley: During 2002, the Department commissioned a scoping study to consider the use of alternative technologies, including biofuels, in helping to tackle fuel poverty. The findings of that report, and the possibility of establishing pilot trials, are currently being considered by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry.

Bushmeat

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what analysis her Department has made of the work of the CBD bushmeat working group. [101329]

Mr. Morley: A liaison group to be convened under the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) to consider inter alia non-timber forest products, including bushmeat, has yet to meet. Therefore, no analysis of this work has been made.

Chewing Gum

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to apply the principles of producer responsibility to those who manufacture and retail chewing gum; what contribution the manufacturers of chewing gum provide to the cost of cleaning up pavements and public places of discarded chewing gum; and what plans she has to apply the pollutor pays principle to the manufacturers of chewing gum. [102595]

Alun Michael: We encourage manufacturers and retailers to participate in a voluntary scheme to use the international Tidyman logo on products. The environmental charity, Environmental Campaigns (ENCAMS), which undertakes work on behalf of the Government, owns a logo which includes the Tidyman logo and draws up voluntary agreements with willing participants.

I am not aware of any gum manufacturers providing funding for the cost of cleaning gum from pavements but Defra officials have had meetings with the industry and I recently had a constructive meeting with Wrigley's, which is Britain's largest producer of chewing gum, to discuss these issues.

Defra's consultation document Living Places—Powers, Rights, Responsibilities, includes an option to include discarded chewing gum as litter to which existing litter duties and powers apply. This option would impact on anyone irresponsibly discarding chewing gum as they would then be committing a litter offence.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the manufacturers of chewing gum regarding the public nuisance of their discarded product. [102596]

Alun Michael: Officials at Defra have been involved in discussions with gum manufacturers since last summer with a view to finding an acceptable solution to the problems surrounding chewing gum litter. Recently, I met Wrigley's, as the largest UK producer of chewing gum, to discuss this issue.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research her Department has commissioned to develop techniques for removing chewing gum from footpaths, pavements and other public places; and what steps her Department has taken to encourage effective methods of removing discarded chewing gum from footpaths, pavements and other public places. [102597]

Alun Michael: The environmental charity Environmental Campaigns (ENCAMS), which is grant funded by Defra, has produced advice and guidance on prevention and cleansing for local authorities under the banner "Become an Authority on Gum"

Defra's consultation document Living Places—Powers, Rights, Responsibilities, included several options relating to chewing gum. We are currently evaluating responses to that consultation exercise, which closed on 14 February, and will then consider how to take matters forward.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the local authority associations concerning chewing gum. [102599]

Alun Michael: Defra has not had specific discussions with the Local Government Association concerning the cleaning up of chewing gum. The environmental charity, Environmental Campaigns (ENCAMS), which is grant funded by Defra, has been working with gum manufacturers and local authorities over many years to develop best practice on prevention through education and cleansing affected areas. Our consultation document 'Living Places' refers to the problem of dealing with chewing gum and we are currently considering the responses from a variety of sources including local government.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the cost of cleaning chewing gum from pavements and other public areas in the last 12 months. [102600]

Alun Michael: We have made no estimates of the cost of chewing gum removal in the last 12 months.

Chickens/Eggs (Imports)

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) chickens and (b) eggs were imported from (i) Holland, (ii) Germany and (iii) Italy in the last year for which figures are available. [102370]

Mr. Morley: 2002 is the latest year for which figures are available on the imports of chickens and eggs from Germany, Holland and Italy. The provisional figures are as follows:

Number of live chicks and chickens (of the species Gallus Domesticus) imported to the UK in 2002 (thousand head)

From	Number
Netherlands	92.6
Germany	1,236.6
Italy	nil

Number of eggs imported to the UK in 2002 (million dozen)[1]

From	Number
Netherlands	22.4
Germany	14.3
Italy	0.2

[1] Estimates based on the value and volume of trade and the average weight per dozen eggs.

Dangerous Dogs Act

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many dogs have been detained in the UK under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 in 2003. [102917]

Mr. Morley: There are no centrally held records of dogs held under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 in the UK. However, the Metropolitan police, who hold the largest number of dogs under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 (as amended) currently hold 19.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost has been to public funds of dogs detained under the provisions of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 in 2003. [102918]

Mr. Morley: There are no centralised records of figures or costs of dogs held, by all police forces, under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 (as amended). However, the Metropolitan police who hold the largest number of dogs under the 1991 Act, have informed us that the total cost within the Metropolitan police area of dogs currently held in 2003 under the 1991 Act is £63,937.

Dolphins

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many dolphin bodies have been washed up on UK beaches (a) since the beginning of January and (b) in the last five years. [102760]

Mr. Morley: Since the beginning of January to 12 March 2003, 168 dolphins (out of a total of 265 cetaceans) have been reported as having stranded in the UK. In the last five years, the numbers of reported stranded dolphins are as follows:

	Dolphins	Total number of cetaceans
2002	199	649
2001	155	549
2000	88	421

	Dolphins	Total number of cetaceans
1999	57	386
1998	59	369

It should be noted that these figures include stranded, dead cetaceans, live strandings, carcases seen floating at sea, reported cetacean bycatch and cases of unconfirmed or suspected cetacean bycatch. The data was obtained under the Defra-funded Cetacean and Turtle Strandings Scheme, carried out by the Natural History Museum in partnership with the Institute of Zoology and Scottish Agricultural College.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what targets are being set for energy efficiency and renewable energy; and if she will make a statement. [102506]

Mr. Morley: In January 2000 the Government announced their aim for renewables to supply 10 per cent. of UK electricity in 2010, subject to the costs being acceptable to the consumer. We believe that renewable sources of energy will increasingly demonstrate that they can meet our energy needs at both an economically acceptable cost and in a carbon free way. On that basis, our aspiration is by 2020 to double renewables' share of electricity from our 2010 target and we will pursue policies to achieve this.

More than half the emissions reductions in our Climate Change Programme—around 10 million tonnes of carbon per annum—is expected to come from energy efficiency. Further ahead, we believe that energy efficiency can contribute around half of the additional 15–25 million tonnes of annual carbon savings we are likely to need by 2020. A strategy for achieving these savings is set out in the Energy White Paper.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many area based sustainable energy projects and partnerships incorporating a Home Health Programme there are; where they are located; what areas they cover; and what their annual budgets are. [103169]

Mr. Morley: Despite a detailed search, my officials can find no record of a Home Health Programme. Turning to sustainable energy projects in general, the majority operate on a national basis, providing assistance to households and communities across the country.

To encourage sustainable energy projects:

We are spending £50 million over two years on the UK wide Community Energy programme which promotes community heating. So far £8.5million of grants have been approved. Two of these grants have been for innovative energy from waste schemes.

The Energy Crops Scheme has allocated £650,000 of grants to promote the establishment of energy crops in England.

We fund the Countryside Agency's Community Renewables Initiative, which promotes the establishment of local renewable energy schemes in England.

The DTI fund both the UK wide Bio Energy Capital Grants Scheme and the UK wide £10 million Clear Skies initiative. Both are relatively new initiatives. The Bio Energy Capital Grants scheme aims to ensure the development of 100MW biomass heating provision at all scales, while Clear Skies provides advice and support for the installation of household and renewable community renewable schemes.

To encourage domestic energy savings and health initiatives:

We fund the Warm Front grant scheme which assisted over 500,000 households living in Fuel Poverty by installing energy efficiency measures. This indicates that the Government are making good progress toward meeting its target of assisting 600,000 homes by 2004.

The Government have established the Energy Efficiency Commitment. The Commitment requires electricity and gas suppliers to achieve targets for the promotion of improvements in energy efficiency, with an emphasis on helping lower income customers. The overall target on all suppliers is a combined saving of 62 fuel-standardised terawatt hours.

Defra and DTI are funding a pilot Warm Zones initiative in five areas in England. The zones attempt to identify all fuel poor households in an area, and ensure that existing schemes are used to improve the energy efficiency of those homes. The pilot is being evaluated at present and an interim report is expected shortly.

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when boiler repairs and replacements were incorporated into measures funded by Warm Front for non-pensioner households; what amendments to the scheme regulations were needed to authorise these measures; what provision there is for service and maintenance of the boilers; and if central heating systems can be funded or part funded through the Warm Front scheme for non-pensioner households. [100162]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 March 2003]: Following a public consultation, the New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme was launched in June 2000. The scheme, now marketed as Warm Front, introduced heating measures, boiler repairs and replacements. Only those over 60 on a qualifying benefit are eligible for central heating system installations, under Warm Front Plus.

As a result, the grant maximum increased from £315 to £1,000 in 2000 and to £1,500 in 2001 for under 60s households. The grant maximum for over 60s households is £2,500. Revised regulations were issued to enable these amendments.

All installations under Warm Front are guaranteed for a year by Eaga Partnership and TXU Warm Front Ltd. who manage the scheme. All materials used are guaranteed by the manufacturer for a year, with the exception of storage heaters which are guaranteed for two years.

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if (a) Ministers and (b) officials in her Department have discussed with TXU Warm Front the use of promotional literature for the Warm Front scheme as a means of selling other goods and services. [100163]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 March 2003]: The Government's main programme for tackling fuel poverty in the private sector in England is the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES), now marketed as 'The Warm Front Team'. Warm Front provides insulation and heating measures depending upon the needs of the householder and the property type to eligible households.

TXU Warm Front Ltd. is one of the two scheme managers appointed to administer the scheme.

The literature used by TXU outlines measures offered by Warm Front and is not used as a vehicle for selling any other goods or services.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of the total expenditure on warm front grants made in England and Wales in the financial years ending 2001 and 2002 were represented by (a) loft and (b) cavity wall insulation measures. [90811]

Mr. Morley: Expenditure requested as a percentage of total grant expenditure for the warm front scheme in England was as follows:

Percentage

	2000–01	2001–02
Cavity wall insulation	29	22
Loft insulation	16	15

The drop in the proportion of expenditure on cavity wall insulation in the second year of the scheme reflects increased activity in the installation of heating measures, which have a higher average cost per household.

The New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme in Wales is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what was the average administrative cost associated with each household that benefited under the warm front scheme, as a percentage of the cost of the measures installed in 2001–02. [90808]

Mr. Morley: In 2001–02, approximately 23 per cent. of total expenditure on the scheme related to administration costs, covering surveying, inspections, marketing, energy efficiency advice, installer management and customer support services including the Scheme Managers' call centres.

English Nature

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the administrative cost was of English Nature for each Government Office of the regions in each year since 1999–2000. [102683]

Mr. Morley: English Nature's grant in aid has been £44.68 million (1999–2000), £49.924 million (2000–01), £58.010 million (2001–02), £66.855 million (2002–03). Of this, insofar as spending in the Government Regions, the following has been spent:

Government Regional Office	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
East Midlands	979	928	1,110	1,120
East of England	1,517	1,749	1,988	2,002
London	197	198	223	225
North East	764	635	719	729
North West	1,293	1,410	1,608	1,602

South West	2,388	2,618	3,199	3,244
Yorkshire/Humberside	1,013	1,027	1,281	1,287
Total	10,987	11,786	13,627	13,688
National (amount spent in EN HQ on the regions	10,618	11,771	14,253	14,681
Overall total	21,605	23,557	27,880	28,369

Ethical Banking

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what contracts have been concluded as a result of the Government's commitment to support ethical banking. [89945]

Alun Michael: Defra predominantly banks with the Bank of England and there have been no other relevant contracts concluded.

EU Environment Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the outcome was of the Environment Council on 4 March 2003; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting records; and if she will make a statement. [101747]

Margaret Beckett: I represented the UK at Environment Council on 4 March 2003, accompanied by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment. The Council reached a political agreement on one legislative measure, and also considered a number of other important issues.

The Council reached a political agreement on the Forest Focus Regulation, which concerns forest monitoring, with the UK among its supporters. Italy, Spain, and Portugal would have preferred greater support for fire prevention measures, and therefore abstained. The Commission also withheld its support.

We debated the Commission's proposals to revise the Bathing Water Directive, which would raise the required bathing water quality standards across the EU. There was general support for high standards where this would benefit the public, but widespread concern that the measures should be proportionate to the public health benefits sought, and flexible in their application. My right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Environment expressed concern over the soundness of the Commission's cost benefit analysis, and explained that, in the UK, illness related to bathing in sea waters is not a problem serious enough to feature in the public health surveillance system. Most bathing waters in the UK would already meet the higher standards proposed, but there would be high costs involved in ensuring compliance at all times for about 15 per cent. of beaches in England and Wales. There was a risk therefore that the proposals as currently drafted would incur disproportionate costs of compliance for comparatively little benefit. Portugal, Belgium, Netherlands, Ireland, Spain, Germany, France and Austria all expressed similar concerns. There was wide support for more flexibility in the use of management measures to implement the Directive. Most states also asked for greater clarity of definitions. There was no support for extending the scope of the Directive to waters used for other recreational purposes, and this was accepted by the Commission. The Presidency concluded that Council had given a sufficient steer for further progress to be achieved by the next Council, in June.

Council also debated the proposed Environmental Liability Directive, and in particular the issues of financial security and biodiversity. I made it clear that the UK insurance industry did not support compulsory financial security. It would make little sense to make financial security compulsory if the market is unable to provide the necessary cover. There was support for this line of reasoning from Ireland, France, Italy, Netherlands, the Commission and Germany. There was also some support for a compromise proposed by the Greek Presidency, that compulsory financial security should be phased in. This was not an option I was able to support. On biodiversity, I put forward the view, also supported by France and Germany, that to be insurable and provide certainty, the scope of the Directive should be site-based. The remaining Members favoured extending the scope of the directive to cover all EU-protected biodiversity wherever it may, with an option to include nationally protected species too. The Presidency concluded that progress had been made towards reaching political agreement in June.

We agreed Council Conclusions calling for a community strategy to protect and conserve the marine environment. The Commission reported on action taken in relation to the Prestige incident, and will present a full report to the European Council later this month. Council accepted a Spanish request asking the Commission to consider liability and sanctions in relation to the safety of marine transport. France and Spain also reported on the progress of clean-up operations.

We also discussed the Council's contribution on Sustainable Development for the Spring European Council, and agreed a lengthy set of Conclusions, which included an emphasis on the need for implementation of the commitments made at the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg last September, and on the importance of encouraging the development of environmental technologies.

Council also adopted Conclusions on the Fifth Pan-European Ministerial Conference "Environment for Europe", to be held in Kiev in May.

The Commission gave an update on approvals of Genetically Modified Organisms, and their co-existence with conventional crops. It was announced that an option paper on co-existence by Commissioner Fischler would be released on 5 March, and a Round Table discussion would follow at the end of April.

On approvals, Commissioner Walstrom noted that there are currently 19 applications in the process, which should be dealt with on a case by case basis. I supported the position of the Commission, along with Sweden, Finland, the Netherlands and Ireland, that existing legislation is adequate for an orderly return to decision making. A number of other member states continued to argue against proceeding with authorisations until the new traceability and labelling rules come into force. The Commissioner explained that it was unlikely that any authorisation would complete the process before the traceability and labelling rules came into force in any event. She emphasised the need to move the process forward, and that there is no justification for further delay.

Denmark sought clarification from the Commission concerning its guidelines on the presence of metabolites in groundwater. The Commission confirmed that these are not legally binding, and that the expected groundwater directive will look into this issue.

The Commission reported that it was on track with its long-awaited chemicals package, with an early interim consultation, followed by adoption by the Commission in early summer. It also formally presented its proposals on ozone depleting substances, a monitoring mechanism for greenhouse gases and volatile organic compounds in paints.

Over lunch we discussed progress towards ratification of the Kyoto protocol.

Fairtrade

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made and representations she has received regarding the application of Fairtrade status to British farmers; and if she will make a statement. [102441]

Mr. Morley: We have seen a report that the Soil Association and the Fairtrade Foundation were planning to announce an extension of the Fairtrade mark to British produce but I am unaware of any representations to government on this matter. For its part the Government are striving to rid agriculture of the constraints of price protection and production-related subsidies and to reconnect farmers with their markets. The Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food launched last December aims to help deliver this objective and sets out how Government, industry and others can work together to secure a more positive future for the food and farming industries. It contains a number of measures to help farmers reconnect with their customers and the rest of the food chain, to improve co-operation and performance, and to enhance training and opportunities to learn from best practice. The Government also remain determined to secure market-oriented reforms to the Common Agricultural Policy and through the WTO.

Fallen Livestock

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps her Department has taken to provide guidance to farmers on the disposal of dead livestock after 3 April. [103454]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Guidance on the disposal of fallen stock is available from local Animal Health offices and on the Defra website. In addition, the Department will shortly be writing to livestock farmers explaining the changes to the legislation, and to provide advice as to what disposal routes are available.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to ensure that alternatives are in place for all farmers to deal with fallen stock when on-farm burial is banned. [103011]

Mr. Morley: The situation regarding Government funding in other member states is complicated. Based on data provided by each member state, the European Commission issued a paper on 20 November 2001. It showed that the level of Government support varies across the Community, with farmers in some countries paying the full cost of disposal while in others the Government or local authority provides support.

The collection and disposal industries for fallen stock have stated that there is sufficient capacity within the existing infrastructure to deal with the estimated additional quantities of fallen stock when the ban on burial comes into effect.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information she collates in respect of the policy in other EU member states concerning financial support for farmers to deal with fallen stock. [103012]

Mr. Morley: The situation regarding Government funding in other member states is complicated. Based on data provided by each member state, the European Commission issued a paper on 20 November 2001. It showed that the level of Government support varies across the Community, with farmers in some countries paying the full cost of disposal while in others the Government or local authority provides support.

The collection and disposal industries for fallen stock have stated that there is sufficient capacity within the existing infrastructure to deal with the estimated additional quantities of fallen stock when the ban on burial comes into effect.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many fishing vessels in each EU country have been deemed by the European Commission to be economically viable; and what assessment has been made of the costs of paying off vessels and crews from these countries. [103696]

Mr. Morley: The Commission has made no authoritative estimates in these areas. Indicative figures provided by the Commission last May, of the scale of decommissioning implied by their proposals for recovery plans, have been challenged by a number of member states.

Food Safety

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she has appraised the testing methodology obliged in the Processed Animal Protein (England) Regulations 2001 against the currently best available methodologies for the same tasks. [102836]

Mr. Morley: The Processed Animal Protein (England) Regulations 2001, all except the international trade provisions of that legislation, were replaced by and incorporated into the TSE (England) Regulations 2002 on 19 April 2002.

The development of effective detection methods to distinguish the species content of meal intended for feed is a priority for Defra. The Commission has indicated that they are prepared to re-consider the current ban on fishmeal in ruminant feed once such a test has been validated. Full validation of a new test technique, however, is likely to take some time to achieve. In addition to the on-going development work, there are assessments being made both in the European context and in the UK to examine the currently available technology. A paper summarising the current position was prepared by Defra for a recent meeting of the Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs, and can be found at: http://www.foodstandards.gov.uk/multimedia/pdfs/acaf0237.pdf

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she has appraised the testing methodology obliged in the Animal By-Products Order 1999 against the currently best available methodologies for the same tasks. [102837]

Mr. Morley: Testing under the Animal By-Products Order 1999 may be carried out under the methodology set out in the Order, or by a method which conforms with the relevant British or International Standards.

Hampshire Avon Catchment

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place in the Library a copy of the first annual report under the operating agreement signed by Ofwat, the Environment Agency, English Nature and Wessex Water on restoring sustainable flows to the Hampshire Avon Catchment. [103540]

Mr. Morley: I am pleased to inform the hon. Member that the 'First Annual Report to the Minister on Progress in Restoring Flows in the Malmesbury Avon, River Wyle and River Piddle' was placed in the House Library at the end of February.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many nitrate vulnerable zones have been designated; and what percentage of the land area of England and Wales is designated as nitrate vulnerable zones. [102984]

Mr. Morley: The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs is only responsible for implementing the Nitrates Directive in England.

In 1996, the Government designated 66 Nitrate Vulnerable Zones (NVZs) covering 8 per cent. of England's land area.

In October 2002, the Government designated NVZs covering an additional 47 per cent. of England's land area. This brings total coverage of England to around 55 per cent. The Government have not made an assessment of the total number of discrete NVZs in England.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her assessment is of the effect on land values of the introduction of nitrate vulnerable zones. [103020]

Mr. Morley: The Government have not made an assessment of the effect on land values of the introduction of nitrate vulnerable zones.

The Government have published a Regulatory Impact Assessment paper which sets out the costs to the agricultural industry of complying with the Action Programme measures in England. This publication is available in the Defra Library and via the Defra NVZ web pages (www.defra.gov.uk/environment/water/quality/nitrate/library.htm).

Radioactive Contamination

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research has been commissioned from consultants to assess the (a) need for and (b) prospective benefits of industry profiles for radioactively contaminated land. [103115]

Mr. Meacher: Consultants are currently carrying out work to assess the need for and benefits of industry profiles for radioactively contaminated land. They are to report in early April. If the results of this are positive, industry profile(s) for operations using radioactive material outside nuclear sites will be produced. They will provide information on the processes, materials and wastes associated with individual industries and advise on how best to identify, assess and tackle the problems of land contamination. This will provide useful supporting guidance for the introduction of a regime to deal with radioactively contaminated land (excluding that on nuclear licensed sites).

Rural Proofing

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact on the rural proofing of housing policy of the withdrawal of local authority social housing grant. [102337]

Margaret Beckett: The decision to abolish local authority social housing grant was taken in light of the increased provision for investment in existing and new affordable housing announced in "Sustainable Communities: building for the future". LASHG was a funding mechanism used by many rural authorities, among others, but they should not lose out under the new arrangements. By 2006, the money available for housing will be nearly 50 per cent. higher than this year. The new regional housing boards will recommend how these resources should be spent and will be required to ensure that their regional housing strategies are rural proofed.

Safeways

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent (a) representations she has received and (b) discussions she has had regarding the sale of Safeways; and if she will make a statement. [102652]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Ministers and officials in Defra have been sent information or views on the sale of Safeway by some of the companies who have expressed an interest in bidding and by the National Consumer Council.

Officials have met separately with ASDA, Morrison, Safeway, Sainsbury and Tesco, at the companies' request, to listen to points that they wished to make about the sale of Safeway. Ministers have not been involved in these discussions.

Soft Drink Consumption

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many litres of soft drinks were, on average, consumed by each British consumer in the last year for which figures are available. [102255]

Mr. Morley: It is estimated that 75 litres of soft drinks were consumed per person in the UK in the 12 month period starting in April 2001. Soft drinks are defined to exclude mineral water and fruit juices. The equivalent consumption of mineral water was 13 litres and of fruit juices was 18 litres. These estimates are based upon records of consumer purchases from the Expenditure and Food Survey.

State Veterinary Service

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many veterinary surgeons were employed by the State Veterinary Service on (a) 20 February 2001, (b) 20 February 2002 and (c) 20 February 2003. [103013]

Mr. Morley: The number of Veterinary Surgeons employed by the State Veterinary Service is as follows:

As at 20 February 2001—263
As at 20 February 2002—299
As at February 2003—335

The figures are calculated on a head count basis and include permanent, casual and fixed term appointments. The figures do not include HQ Veterinary Surgeons responsible for policy development in the Animal Health & Welfare Directorate General.

Sustainability Fund

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to use the Sustainability Fund to compensate operators for revoking the most damaging old mineral permissions in national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty. [102693]

Mr. Meacher: Following two full consultation exercises, the core objectives of the Aggregates Levy Sustainability Fund (ALSF) were set to support work in three main categories: minimising demand for primary aggregates; promoting environmentally friendly aggregates extraction and transportation; and reducing the local effects of aggregates extraction. Using the fund as a mechanism for compensating operators for revoking permissions was not raised in either consultation and does not, therefore, feature in the scheme.

English Nature has been designated as the distributing body for projects aimed at addressing the effects of old mineral planning permissions, increasing biodiversity and conserving geological features and the Countryside Agency distributes funds for projects that conserve and enhance the countryside. For both cases, the ALSF operates as a project based scheme and does not provide a mechanism for compensating operators for revoked permissions.

Veterinary Surgeons (Assaults)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many assaults on veterinary surgeons by farmers have occurred on farms in each year since 1997. [101146]

Mr. Morley: There have been two reported physical assaults on State Veterinary Service Veterinarians, since 1997. These are listed as follows:

17 May 199—Veterinary Officer threatened and prodded in ribs by farmer

25 February 2003—Veterinary Officer pushed into slurry pit

We take any such assaults on staff seriously and we expect appropriate action to be taken against anyone responsible for such acts.

Welsh Farming

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement about the effect of the proposed reform of the common agricultural policy on Welsh farming. [100735]

Mr. Morley: We have undertaken various economic and impact assessments of the Commission's reform proposals, which conclude that overall the reforms would have a positive effect on farmers and farm incomes in the UK. Results of the main analysis will be published later this month. The likely effects of the proposed reforms in Wales are a matter for the Welsh Assembly Government.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Education (Northampton)

Mr. Tony Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children per 1,000 are issued with a statement of special needs in (a) Northamptonshire and (b) Northampton. [100806]

Mr. Miliband: The latest information available is shown in the table.

All schools: Pupils with statements of special educational needs January 2002

	Number on roll	Number of pupils with a statement of special educational needs	Number of pupils in every 1,000 with a statement of special educational needs[1]

[1] The number of pupils with statements expressed as a proportion of the number of pupils on roll.

Milk Vouchers

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has for the disbandment of the milk voucher system for school children. [102400]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

There are no plans to end the supply of free milk to children in nursery or day care under the welfare food scheme. The consultation document, "Healthy Start", included a proposal to broaden the nutritional scope of the scheme by offering children in nursery or day care a choice of milk or fruit.

The nursery element of the scheme does not involve the use of vouchers.

Sikhs

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what support and materials he is making available in schools to increase awareness of Sikhs and their religion. [103034]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The current policy regarding religious education is set out in the Department for Education and Skills circular 1/94. All RE syllabuses in schools should seek to develop pupils' knowledge, understanding and awareness, not only of Christianity, but also the other principal religions represented in the country, including Sikhism.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Age Discrimination

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to make unfair discrimination on grounds of age unlawful in Northern Ireland and to ensure equality of access and opportunity for older people. [96852]

Mr. Browne: We plan to issue our proposals for legislation to tackle age discrimination for consultation in the summer. We intend that legislation will be made before the deadline of 2006 imposed by the European Directive.

The consultation in 2001 on the general content and scope of a single Equality Bill asked some general questions about age discrimination. There are many complex issues to be addressed and we want to ensure that we take account of expert advice and comments in taking forward this work.

In addition to new legislation, Departments have a duty under section 75 (i) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity between persons of different age.

We have also established a Working Group under the Promoting Social Inclusion initiative to look at factors which cause older people to be at risk of social exclusion. The Working Group will present Ministers with a draft policy and strategy document for public consultation, setting out clearly defined recommendations as to what preventative and other measures are required.

Education System

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what system for transfer of pupils between primary schools and secondary schools will operate after the planned abolition of the 11 plus examination. [103248]

Jane Kennedy: No decisions have been taken about new transfer arrangements. I am considering carefully the views expressed in meetings with political parties, the education sector and parents, along with the responses to all the strands of the consultation, before determining the next stages of the review of post-primary education. My aim is to maintain the current high levels of achievement and build a modern and fair education system that enables all children in Northern Ireland to fulfil their potential.

Football

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the decision was made to provide funding for soccer in Northern Ireland; and who made that decision. [103187]

Angela Smith: Funding has been provided to soccer for many years. However on 7 February 2003, following advice from the Soccer Strategy Advisory Panel, I announced that the IFA's proposed Development Plan offered a sufficient basis for moving forward on the development of Soccer in Northern Ireland. I also made it clear that, before funding relating to the plan can be provided, I would require assurances that:

the IFA's proposals are ratified at its Annual General Meeting;

the governing body's new executive and accountability arrangements are in place; and accountability requirements for Government funding, including implementation, monitoring and evaluation, are satisfied.

Hares

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hare courses took place at the Dungannon Coursing Club meet on 2 November 2002. [102906]

Angela Smith: The number of courses that take place in any organised coursing event on the island of Ireland is subject to the policy and rules of the Irish Coursing Club. The policy for coursing in Northern Ireland is set by the Department for Social Development in conjunction with the ICC.Environment and Heritage Service of the DOE issue permits to allow the netting of hares for use in coursing events. Under the conditions of these permits, EHS officials monitor the catching of hares before the event and the return of the hares to the wild after the event. The officials have no role in coursing events, consequently I am unable to answer the hon. Member's question.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the recent research of the Northern Irish Hare Survey; and what actions he proposes to implement its recommendations on the hare's status as a quarry species. [102905]

Angela Smith: Professor Montgomery's report, entitled "The Northern Ireland Irish Hare Survey 2002", was received by my Department on 14 February 2003.

The report provides a current population estimate and compares these results with data collected in a 1997 survey. It also assesses the merits of two survey techniques and makes recommendations for future Irish hare monitoring. Professor Montgomery's team concludes that a method of survey known as 'Night Driven Transect Survey' allows a reliable estimate of hare abundance to be calculated.

The 2002 Night Driven Transect Survey produced an average density estimate of one hare per square kilometre in Northern Ireland, an estimate similar to that reported in 1997. The present report concludes that hares are widespread and are found most frequently in upland areas. Hares were more frequently recorded in County Antrim during the survey and were less frequent in County Tyrone. The survey technique is not a census and so the sample survey gives an estimate of 14,000 hares for Northern Ireland, with lower 95 per cent. confidence limit of 7,000 and an upper confidence limit of 25,200.

Professor Montgomery concludes, "That the population of Irish hares appears to be stable, albeit at a low density."

The contract also required the Queen's University Team to make recommendations for practical measures which could improve the status of the Irish Hare in the medium to long term. One of the recommendations was as follows: "Removal of the Irish Hare from the quarry list and protection given under the Wildlife Order."

In the Irish Hare Species Action Plan, published by DOE in October 2000, a number of actions are listed for consideration. Section 5 deals with Policy and Legislation and Action 5.1.3 recommends that DOE "Review, and if necessary, increase the level of protection given to the Irish Hare in the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985". My Department has appointed consultants to consider the implications of local Biodiversity Action Plan recommendations on the legal status of species, including the Irish hare, and recommend changes where appropriate. I will ensure that the consultants give very careful consideration to Professor Montgomery's recommendation to remove the Irish Hare from the quarry list. The report resulting from this contract is due in June 2003.

My Department will consider carefully any changes which are proposed to the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985 Schedules or to the Game Preservation Act (NI) 1928 (as amended by the Game LawAmendment Act 1951 and The Game Preservation (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2002) and will bring forward any amendments considered necessary in the usual way.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received a copy of Professor Montgomery's report commissioned by his Department on the hare population in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [101575]

Angela Smith: Professor Montgomery's report, entitled "The Northern Ireland Irish Hare Survey 2002", was received by my Department on 14 February 2003. I welcome the opportunity to make a statement to The House on the results of the survey.

The Irish hare, Lepus timidus hibernicus, is an endemic sub-species, confined to Ireland, of the mountain hare, which has a widespread distribution across northern Europe.

The best evidence available suggests a major decline in Irish hare numbers in Northern Ireland during the latter half of the 20th century. This decline has been largely attributed to a loss of suitable habitat brought about mainly by agricultural intensification and changing patterns of grassland management.

A comprehensive estimate of the population density of Irish hares throughout Northern Ireland was published in 1997. That survey reported that the Irish hare had a widespread distribution and occurred at low densities.

The Environment and Heritage Service responded to the findings of the report by publishing a Species Action Plan in 2000 that listed a number of specific measures geared "to maintain the existing range and to demonstrate a population increase by 2005; and to double the present population by 2010 over as much of the range as possible."

To assess achievement of the Species Action Plan targets, and to have current information on the distribution and abundance of Irish hares, requires a system of regular and effective monitoring of population density and distribution.

Professor Montgomery's report provides a current population estimate and compares these results with data collected in the 1997 survey. It also assesses the merits of two survey techniques and makes recommendations for future Irish hare monitoring. Professor Montgomery's team concludes that a method of survey known as 'Night Driven Transect Survey', allows a reliable estimate of hare abundance to be calculated.

The 2002 Night Driven Transect Survey produced an average density estimate of one hare per square kilometre in Northern Ireland, an estimate similar to that reported in 1997. The present report concludes that hares are widespread and are found most frequently in upland areas. Hares were more frequently recorded in County Antrim during the survey and were less frequent in County Tyrone. The survey technique is not a census and so the sample survey gives an estimate of 14,000 hares for Northern Ireland, with a lower 95 per cent. confidence limit of 7,000 and an upper confidence limit of 25,200.

The report advances a number of recommendations aimed at improving the status of the Irish Hare, these include :

The provision of hare refuge sites.

Hare friendly agricultural practices in agri-environment schemes.

Removal of the Irish hare from the quarry list and protection given under the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985

Increase in awareness of the plight of the Irish Hare by liaison with farming groups, the rural community and DARD.

My Department will give these recommendations active consideration and will act on them in an appropriate manner.

Professor Mongomery concludes, "That the population of Irish hares appears to be stable, albeit at a low density".

This assessment of the current status of the Irish hare in Northern Ireland is welcome, although the success of the Species Action Plan will be judged ultimately on a sustainable increase in the population of this special creature.

Skills Task Force

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Skills Task Force will complete its investigation into labour supply and demand in the construction industry in Northern Ireland. [100434]

Jane Kennedy: The Northern Ireland Skills Taskforce (NISTF) contracts its skills forecasting exercises to the Priority Skills Unit of the Northern Ireland Economic Research Centre (NIERC). Work on the labour supply and demand situations in the construction industry started in February 2003 and is due to be published in November 2003.

HEALTH

Healthcare-acquired Infections

18. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress his Department has made in reducing the number of healthcare-acquired infections. [103210]

Mr. Hutton: We have introduced a mandatory surveillance system for healthcare associated infection and since April 2001 all acute national health service trusts have reported methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus blood stream infections. The first year's data show that rates tend to be higher in special trusts and in the south and east of the country. An MRSA improvement score will be a performance indicator from July. Surveillance will be extended to other micro-organisms and incidents such as outbreaks of gastro-enteritis later this year.

Kent and Canterbury Hospital

19. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Kent and Canterbury Hospital. [103211]

Ms Blears: A decision on the reconfiguration of acute services in east Kent could not be made while the judicial review of the consultation process was under consideration. This has now been completed and Ministers are considering the recommendation made by Kent and Medway Strategic Health Authority.

Capitation Funding (Bedfordshire)

20. Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about capitation funding in Bedfordshire. [103212]

Mr. Lammy: I understand that the Chairman of Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire Strategic Health Authority has written on 10 February to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regarding national health service investment in Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire in 2003–06.

Community Pharmacies

21. Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding the Office of Fair Trading report on community pharmacies. [103213]

Mr. Lammy: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leigh (Andy Burnham) earlier today.

Multiple Sclerosis

22. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the treatment of patients with multiple sclerosis. [103214]

Jacqui Smith: We are committed to improving care and treatment for people with multiple sclerosis. Around 4,600 patients are receiving treatment with a disease modifying drug. A National Institute for Clinical Excellence guideline will be published shortly. This and the forthcoming National Service Framework for Long Term Conditions will help to improve services for people with MS.

First Aid

23. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Skills on teaching basic first aid to children in schools. [103215]

Ms Blears: Department for Education and Skills and Department of Health officials have always worked closely together on this issue—most recently in the development of the Safety Education Guidance for schools.

First aid training is included in the revised National Curriculum, introduced into schools in September 2000. This includes a non-statutory framework for Personal, Social and Health Education in both primary and secondary schools.

Hospital Reconfigurations

25. Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on hospital reconfigurations. [103217]

Mr. Hutton: New guidance, "Keeping the NHS Local: A New Direction of Travel" was published on 14 February. It challenges the view that 'biggest is best', and puts patients and the public at the centre of the process. The core principles must be applied by the NHS with immediate effect.

Acute Trusts

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases primary care trusts are withholding money from acute trusts; and what the (a) individual and (b) total value is of the amounts being disputed. [103216]

Mr. Hutton: In line with this Government's policy of shifting the balance of power, discussions about such issues take place between the national health service trust and the relevant commissioner and, if required, the managing Strategic Health Authority.

Autism and Asperger Syndrome

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding he has allocated into the (a) causes, (b) care and (c) treatment of (i) autism and (ii) Asperger Syndrome in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [102930]

Jacqui Smith: The Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives most of its income via grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, is the main government agency that funds research into medical conditions. The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support for research into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. The MRC funds a large amount of work on the causes and treatment of autism, and to increase the knowledge base of issues surrounding autism. The amounts the MRC has spent on autism research in recent years are shown in Table 1.

Table 1: MRC spend on autism research

Year	Amount (£)
1997–98	905,000
1998–99	1,041,000
1999–2000	1,114,000
2000–01	1,182,000
	(any figures for 2001–02)
2001–02	1,257,000

I announced on 14 February 2002 that the Government have allocated an extra £2.5 million to the MRC to help them to take forward recommendations on further research contained in their report of their review of the epidemiology and causes of autism. The additional funds provide the opportunity for the MRC to accelerate research on autism, building on existing strengths and addressing gaps, which were identified in the report. It will complement and add to the MRCs current support for research in this field.

Under the section 64 General Scheme of Grants to Voluntary Organisations, the Department of Health issues funds to further its objectives in the health and social care fields in England. National Autistic Society projects, which have received funding in the last five years, are shown in Table 2.

Table 2: Section 64 Grants to the National Autistic Society

Year	Project	Amount (£)
1998–99	Regional Advice Service	40,000
1999–2000	Regional Advice Service	45,000

2001–02	Asperger's Syndrome	40,000
2001–02	Parental Training	46,000
2002–03	Parental Training	48,000
2002–03	Independence and Autism	49,000

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding he has allocated to social service departments to support those with autism and Asperger Syndrome and their carers in each of the last five years. [102931]

Jacqui Smith: Our increased investment in personal social services in England in recent years will benefit people with autism as well as everyone else who needs them. Details are set out in the table. Amounts for specific conditions are not separately identified within allocations to social services departments. Health bodies and local authorities should ensure that the particular health and social care needs of each person with autism and Asperger's Syndrome are met with genuine choices for both clients and families, through the most appropriate community based services, in a cost-effective way.

In 1999–2000, we introduced the new children's services grant, whose purpose is to help local authorities implement the Quality Protects programme and in particular to improve the life chances of looked after children and children in need. Disabled children, including those with autism, have been made a priority area in the programme.

Since the carers grant was introduced in 1999, it has provided an extra £225 million over four years to increase the number of breaks for carers. In recognition of the importance placed on supporting carers, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, announced in July 2002 that the grant has been extended for a further three years to 2005–06. During this time it will provide extended care and 130,000 further breaks to carers.

Details of the past and proposed future amounts of both grants are shown in the table.

Barnet Chase Farm Trust

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish diagnostic and treatment centres at (a) Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital and (b) Barnet and Chase Farm Trust; when he expects such centres to become operational; and if he will make a statement. [98937]

Mr. Hutton: The need for additional capacity was identified in north central London and this was included in the December procurement exercise for independent sector Diagnosis Treatment Centres (DTCs).

A DTC at the Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital was also included in the December procurement exercise for independent sector DTCs.

The two DTCs are intended to be operational as soon after contract close as the independent sector can mobilise and in any event by March 2005.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on planning for the event of deliberate release of biological weapons. [103203]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service has made contingency plans for the deliberate use of chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear weapons. These plans are kept under careful and continuous review. Overall responsibility for CBRN planning rests with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Child Care Allowances (Trainee Nurses)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to pay a child care allowance for trainee nurses entitled to an NHS bursary. [103138]

Mr. Hutton: The Government have already made a commitment to introduce help with the costs of child care for all national health service-funded students, including trainee nurses, with children aged up to five years, by 2004.

Children's Diets

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of overall funding to improve the nation's eating habits is allocated to improving children's diets. [101386]

Ms Blears: During the year 2002–03, 93.5 per cent, of the cost of Department of Health and Food Standards Agency (FSA) led initiatives to improve the nation's eating habits was allocated specifically to improving children's diets.

Funding for Department-led programmes aimed at improving children's diets totals £140.98 million, including the National School Fruit Scheme, with funding from the New Opportunities Fund, Food in Schools, in conjunction with the Department for Education and Skills, Welfare Foods and support for breastfeeding. The FSA has provided funding of £0.58 million as part of its nutrition action plan to support initiatives aimed at improving the diet and nutrition of children.

Funding not specific to children totals £9.83 million, including five-a-day community initiatives, with funding from the New Opportunities Fund, other FSA activities and grants to charities.

In addition to the above, local nutrition initiatives are funded through health action zones, sure start, healthy living centres and through general funding allocations to health authorities and primary care trusts, on which information is not collected centrally.

Children's Hospices

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which children's hospices have been visited by (a) him and (b) Ministers in his Department since May 2001. [95996]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not had the opportunity to visit any hospice whose sole remit is the care of terminally ill children. Should an opportunity arise to undertake such a visit he would give it his full consideration.

Richard House Children's Hospice in East London was visited in March 2002 by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Public Health, the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper).

Clinical Consultants (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the clinical consultant caseload in Salisbury is (a) ward-based and (b) home-based; and if he will make a statement. [103079]

Ms Blears: This information is not held centrally. Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) only holds data for admitted patient care in England's National Health Service hospitals and therefore data is not available for home care. Collection of data at ward level is not mandatory and therefore is not available.

Emergency Admissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the National Priorities Guidance target to reduce the per capita rate of growth in emergency admissions of people aged 75 or over to an annual average of 3 per cent. up to 2002–03. [102523]

Jacqui Smith: Comparing emergency admissions data for the first three quarters of 2002–03 with the first three quarters of 2001–02 suggests a growth in emergency admissions of 1.1 per cent.

Food Imports

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to charge the importers of non-animal foodstuffs from outside the EU for the testing of their imports into the United Kingdom under the proposals in the EU document of 10 February (EC Draft 6090/03). [102848]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has lead responsibility for this proposal on official feed and food controls. I am advised by the FSA that the proposal is for a Regulation of the European Parliament and of the Council and as such, once adopted, its provisions will be directly applicable in all the Member States. This includes the provisions on imports from outside the European Union of foodstuffs of non-animal origin. The FSA's understanding of these provisions is that Member States will be required to collect fees for the costs incurred by the competent authorities from the importer or his customs agent. Clarification will be needed during the negotiations, which have not yet started. The FSA commenced a full public consultation on 12 March so that the views of all stakeholders may be taken into account in assessing the implications of the provisions and in developing the United Kingdom policy position on this and other issues arising from the proposal.

Food Standards Agency

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Sir John Krebs will respond to the letter from the hon. Member for North Norfolk (Norman Lamb) dated 9 January 2003 concerning the Food Standards Agency's Annual Report. [102614]

Ms Blears: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 13 March 2003.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his definition is of the term 'subsidiary' as used in the EU document of 10 February (EC Draft 6090/03). [102844]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) has lead responsibility for this proposal on official feed and food controls. I am advised by the FSA that it will seek to ensure that the proposal takes account of the principles of subsidiarity as set out in Article 5 of the Treaty establishing the European Community. In practice this means ensuring that Community action will not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of the Treaty and that decisions are taken at the lowest level consistent with effective action.

Food Supplements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been commissioned by his Department into the costs and implications for product characteristics of the reformulation of food supplements in those cases where nutrient sources in use in the United Kingdom are not included in the lists of permitted nutrients set out in the annexes to the food supplements directive. [103003]

Ms Blears: The Government have not commissioned any research into the costs and implications for product characteristics of reformulation of food supplements in those cases where nutrient sources currently used are not on the list of permitted sources. Information gathered by the Food Standards Agency in preparing the Regulatory Impact Assessment for the draft Food Supplements (England) Regulations 2003 provides estimates of the costs of reformulation up to £3,000 per product.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the potential costs involved in the production of dossiers for submission to the European Food Safety Authority in connection with nutrients for which manufacturers are seeking inclusion in the lists of permitted ingredients set out in annexes to the Food Supplements Directive. [103004]

Ms Blears: The Government have not made its own assessment of the potential costs involved in the production of dossiers for submission to the European Food Safety Authority. Industry cost estimates, provided to the Food Standards Agency during consultation, suggest that they might be £80,000 to £250,000 per dossier where significant safety data are not already available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received from (a) individual companies, (b) trade organisations and (c) consumer bodies about nutrients which are permitted for use in food supplements in the United Kingdom, but which are omitted from the lists of permitted nutrients set out in annexes 1 and 2 of the Food Supplements Directive. [103005]

Ms Blears: A number of individual companies, trade organisations and lobby groups have recently suggested that the Government should seek an amendment to the Food Supplements Directive to allow the continued sale in the United Kingdom of safe and appropriately labelled food supplements even if they lie outside the technical restrictions of the Directive.

During negotiations, the Government fought hard to secure the provisions in Article 4 of the Directive, which enable member states to allow the continued sale of products that do not comply with the compositional requirements up to 31 December 2009, provided certain criteria are met. The Government are taking advantage of these provisions and have no plans to seek a further amendment to the Directive. Negotiations were finished some time ago and it is not likely either that the Commission would be willing to reopen them now or that there would be support from a majority of other member states for such an amendment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department and the Food Standards Agency intend to take to address technical difficulties and financial costs associated with the production of dossiers for consideration by the European Food Safety Authority in relation to nutrients which are not included in the list of permitted ingredients for use in food supplements set out in Schedules 2 and 3 of the proposed Food Supplements (England) Regulations 2003; [103007]

(2) whether his Department and the Food Standards Agency have made representations to (a) the European Commission and (b) the EU Scientific Committee for Foods in relation to the technical difficulties and financial costs associated with the production of dossiers for consideration by the European Food Safety Authority of nutrients which are not included in the list of permitted ingredients for use in food supplements set out in Annexes 1 and 2 of the Food Supplements Directive. [103006]

Ms Blears: The Government are not able to address the financial issues associated with the production of safety dossiers for consideration by the European Food Safety Authority. The Food Standards Agency has written to the European Commission with the aim of facilitating a meeting between United Kingdom stakeholders and representatives of the European Union Scientific Committee on Food to discuss the technical content of such dossiers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number and value of food supplement products on the UK market which contain nutrients omitted from Annexe1 of the Food Supplements Directive and for which no nutrient sources are listed in Annexe 2 of the Directive. [103008]

Ms Blears: The Government have not made an assessment of the number of products on the United Kingdom market which contain nutrients and nutrient sources omitted from Annexes 1 and 2 of the Food Supplements Directive. In the UK, the retail market for vitamins, minerals and other supplements was valued at £335 million in 2000. Industry estimates suggest that up to 5 per cent. of the market may be affected, indicating a value in the region of £16.75 million.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what nutrients are on the market in the United Kingdom as ingredients in food supplements but are not listed in Schedules 2 and 3 of the proposed Food Supplements (England) Regulations 2003 recently published by the Food Standards Agency; how long each of them have been on sale in the UK; and whether representations are under preparation by manufacturers for submission to the European Food Safety Authority for consideration as possible additions to those annexes. [103009]

Ms Blears: According to information provided by industry, the nutrients boron, cobalt, nickel, silicon, tin and vanadium are used as ingredients of food supplements currently on the market in the United Kingdom and are not listed in Schedules 2 and 3 of the draft Food Supplements (England) Regulations 2003 issued for consultation in October 2002. The most recent information received by the Food Standards Agency (FSA) from industry indicates that manufacturers are not preparing safety dossiers for any of these nutrients. The FSA does not hold information on how long each of these nutrients has been on the UK market as ingredients of food supplements.

Foundation Trusts

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the acute NHS trusts which have expressed interest in applying for foundation trust status. [102207]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend, the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Frank Dobson) on 6 March 2003, Official Report, columns 1207–1208W.

Hillcroft Site, Lymington

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the NHS secured from the disposal of the Hillcroft site in Lymington; and if he will make a statement. [103482]

Ms Blears: An agreement between the New Forest primary care trust and the commercial buyer of the Hillcroft site means that it is not possible to publicly divulge the sum. However, the District Auditor, the District Valuer and NHS Estates are satisfied that the sum received by the PCT for the sale of the Hillcroft site is good value for money.

Irradiation (Foodstuffs)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the foodstuffs for which an irradiation process has been permitted. [102669]

Ms Blears: The Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990, as amended, permits the irradiation of seven categories of food in the United Kingdom:

Fruit
Vegetables
Cereals
Bulbs and tubers
Spices and condiments
Fish and shellfish
Poultry

Food that falls within one of the above categories may only be irradiated in a facility that has been granted an Irradiation Licence. Only one UK licence has been granted, which permits the irradiation of a range of dried herbs and spices.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what tests are available to establish whether foodstuffs have been subject to irradiation; how many such checks were carried out in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of those checks identified that illegal irradiation had occurred. [102670]

Ms Blears: There are nine tests that have been standardised by European Committee for Standardisation (CEN) of these thermoluminescence and photostimulated luminescence techniques are the most useful. More specific tests include analysis for alkyl cyclobutanones and electron spin resonance analysis.

The nine standardised detection tests for irradiated foods are:

EN 1784:1996: Detection of irradiated food containing fat—Gas chromatographic analysis of hydrocarbons.

EN 1785:1996: Detection of irradiated food containing fat—Gas chromatographic/mass spectrometric analysis of 2-alkylcyclobutanones

EN 1786:1996: Detection of irradiated food containing bone—Method by ESR spectroscopy

EN 1787:2000: Detection of irradiated food containing cellulose by ESR spectroscopy

EN 1788:2001: Detection of irradiated food from which silicate minerals can be isolated—Method by thermoluminescence

EN 13708:2001: Detection of irradiated food containing crystalline sugar by ESR spectroscopy

EN 13783:2001: Detection of irradiated food using Direct Epifluorescent Filter Technique/Aerobic Plate Count (DEFT/APC)—Screening method

EN 13784:2001: DNA comet assay for the detection of irradiated foodstuffs—Screening method

EN 13751:2002: Detection of irradiated food using photostimulated luminescence.

In June 2002, the Food Standards Agency published the results of a survey for irradiated foods. A total of 543 food samples were analysed. Of these, 58 were found to be illegal irradiated products and six were irradiated but not labelled as such.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) with reference to the NHS Ombudsman's report 'NHS funding for long term care', if he will ensure that new guidance on HSC 2001/15 contains model eligibility criteria, with appropriate use of case studies and examples so that they may be understood by patients as well as professionals, which are consistent with (a) R v North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte of Coughlan of 1999 and the ruling that where a person's primary need is owing to health needs or disabilities, their care is a continuing NHS responsibility, and (b) the consequence of the Appeal Court's decision on the circumstances in which it is unlawful to transfer responsibility for a patient's general nursing care to the local authority; [103148]

(2) if he will make a statement on the comments of the NHS Ombudsman relating to the clarity of HSC 2001/15 in the report 'NHS funding for long term care' with particular reference to the Ombudsman's observation that HSC 2001/015 is weaker than guidance previously declared to be unlawful by the Court of Appeal in R v North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte Coughlan of 1999; [103149]

(3) what steps he is taking to address the comments in the Health Service Ombudsman's report 'NHS funding for long term care' on the clarity of HSC 2001/015. [103152]

Jacqui Smith: The Government will consider the recommendation to review national guidance on continuing care carefully. Once this process is complete, we will consider if any further action is necessary.

From 1 April 2003 and the commencement of Section 49 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001, local authorities will no longer be able to provide nursing care directly.

The Court of Appeal in Coughlan said previous guidance issued by the Department of Health was lawful. The Department of Health is satisfied that the guidance issued in 1999 and 2001was compatible with the Court of Appeal judgement in R v North and East Devon Health Authority ex parte Coughlan of 1999.

Mental Health (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Service Trust have to sell Century House in Salisbury; and if he will make a statement. [103078]

Ms Blears: Century House, which is currently the base for most community mental health services in South Wiltshire, is likely to be sold in 2003–04 for the following reasons:

The building cannot be made compliant with the Disability Discrimination Act

It has health and safety problems

It is not particularly user friendly for many mental health service users

I am advised, however, that sale of the building will not affect the level of service provision but, on the contrary, will increase accessibility for disabled service users.

The Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Partnership National Health Service Trust has already considered alternative options for service delivery. The majority of services will continue to be delivered in service users' homes and community settings, and existing service teams will move in to the new and refurbished buildings at the Old Manor Hospital, where individual consultations and group sessions will take place.

NHS (International Recruitment)

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to introduce legislation to prevent NHS organisations from entering into a contract with a recruitment agency that has not signed up to his Department's code of practice on the international recruitment of health care professionals. [103073]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 March 2003]: There are no immediate plans to introduce legislation to prevent national health service organisations from entering into contracts with agencies who are not adhering to the code of practice. The Department has not been made aware of any trusts that have contravened the code. Monitoring procedures are in place and regular communications issued reminding trusts to only recruit from agencies adhering to the code of practice.

Nursing Student Bursaries

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 27 November 2002, Official Report, column 354W, on nursing student bursaries, whether the 4,600 curricular hours include work placements; and what minimum number of work placement hours a nursing student is required to complete in order to obtain a diploma. [102892]

Mr. Hutton: A nursing student is required to complete 4,600 curricular hours to qualify for a diploma award and achieve professional registration. Of these 4,600 curricular hours, a minimum of 50 per cent. will be designated for learning within practice. These may include simulation of practice learning.

Patient Numbers (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were registered with national health services in each of the last five years in the area covered by North Yorkshire area health authority. [103136]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is shown in the table.

Patients of Unrestricted Principals and Equivalents (UPEs)[1] for North and East Yorkshire and Northern Lincolnshire Strategic Health Authority as at 1 October 1997–99 and 30 September 2000–01

Number (headcount)

	England—Patients of UPEs	North and East Yorkshire and Northern Lincolnshire StHA
1997	50,904,322	1,655,197

1999	50,894,064	1,653,512

Primary Care Trusts (Prisons)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from primary care trusts about the impact on their budgets of providing healthcare services in prisons. [103383]

Jacqui Smith: I have received no recent representations from primary care trusts (PCTs) on this issue. Funding responsibility for health services in prisons will not be fully devolved to PCTs until April 2006.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allowance he has made in budget allocations to primary care trusts for the number of prisons in the area they cover. [103384]

Jacqui Smith: Allocations to primary care trusts (PCTs) for 2003–04 include an element to fund National Health Service secondary care services for prisoners, and take into account the population of each prison in a PCT area. Allocations also include funding for the continuation of existing prison mental health in-reach services.

Prisons

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prison health care centres are categorised as (a) red, (b) amber and (c) green under the traffic lights performance monitoring system; and what the criteria are on which prison healthcare centres are rated under the traffic lights system. [103071]

Jacqui Smith: The current criteria for rating prison health care centres are as follows.

Red—The totality of the problems faced by the health care centre are such that decisive short-term or long-term action is needed to ensure a minimally acceptable and safe service.

Amber—the problems faced need to be resolved quickly and could or would get worse if left unattended, but are not as urgent as those in the Red category.

Green—the problems faced are manageable and on the whole the service provided is acceptable in the short to medium term.

The latest traffic lights ratings show that, on 31 December 2002, there were no red, 28 amber and 110 green prison health care centres.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent estimate he has made of cost implications for future NHS budgets of trends in the prison population. [103388]

Jacqui Smith: Overall financial responsibility for prison health services will transfer from the Home Office to the Department of Health from 1 April 2003. Any subsequent funding identified to support increased prison capacity will contain an element for health care, which will be transferred to the Department of Health.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) sentenced and (b) unsentenced prisoners are receiving treatment for mental health problems; and how many of these are being treated as in-patients (i) in the prison health care centre and (ii) in an NHS setting. [103070]

Jacqui Smith: Information is not available in exactly the form requested. From 1 January to 31 December 2002, there were 39,000 admissions to prison health care centres. We estimate that around 30 per cent. of these, approximately 11,800, were for mental health reasons.

In the national health service setting, the latest available statistics show that in 2001, 3,002 restricted patients were detained in hospital under the Mental Health Act 1983. In this period, 595 prisoners had, by order of the Home Secretary under sections 47 and 48 of the Act, been transferred from prison service establishments to secure places funded by the NHS.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the budgets for mental health in-reach services in prisons. [103386]

Jacqui Smith: Funding for in-reach services established before the end of 2002–03 was included in the baseline resource level allocations that were issued to primary care trusts in December 2002. Further allocations, in respect of new in-reach services to be developed in 2003–04 and additional support for some existing services will be made shortly.

Respite Care

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progess he has made in drawing up guidelines for the use of vouchers for providing respite care. [103296]

Jacqui Smith: We plan to lay the regulations for the short breaks voucher scheme before the House by the end of April, with the guidance to follow thereafter.

Royal Hampshire County Hospital, Winchester

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether emergency surgery facilities will remain at the Royal Hampshire county hospital in Winchester to support a consultant-led accident and emergency service. [102890]

Ms Blears: Our policy of "Shifting the Balance of Power" means that the configuration of local services is a matter for the local national health service, working in partnership with its local community.

The future of services across Hampshire is currently under discussion in a local consultative process called "Healthfit" As this is a matter for the local community it would be inappropriate for Ministers to comment further at this time.

Sexual Assault

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what protocols are in place in Accident and Emergency departments to adopt a fast track system for referrals from (a) sexual assault referral centres and (b) police stations for victims of sexual assault and rape. [101336]

Ms Blears: This is a matter for local determination. However, we would expect all Accident and Emergency departments to have a protocol in place to deal sensitively with victims of sexual assault. This includes medical treatment if needed and support and advice on referral to appropriate local services, including sexual assault referral centres and the police.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require Accident and Emergency departments and primary care trusts to ask patients attending for emergency contraception whether the intercourse was consensual. [101335]

Ms Blears: It is a matter for professional bodies to issue guidance on the supply of emergency hormonal contraception (EHC). All health professionals supplying EHC receive training, which should address issues around sexual history taking, partners and consent. If during a consultation for EHC, disclosure of a sexual assault occurs the health professional should provide support and advise on accessing appropriate local services including counselling, testing and treatment for sexually transmitted infections and, if the woman wishes, reporting the matter to the police.

Smoking

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of 11 to 15-year-olds smoke; and what progress his Department is making towards its objective relating to the incidence of smoking in this age group by 2005. [102567]

Ms Blears: In 2001, 10 per cent. of 11 to 15-year-olds smoked regularly.

The Government White Paper: "Smoking Kills", published in December 1998, included the following target: "To reduce smoking among children from 13 per cent. to 9 per cent. or less by the year 2010; with a fall to 11 per cent. by the year 2005."

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward legislation to ban smoking in public places. [98491]

Ms Blears: Although the Government do not support legislation to ban smoking in all public places, existing health and safety legislation under the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 places responsibility on employers to protect the health, safety and welfare of their employees.

We consider that if we are to ensure protection against passive smoking in public places and workplaces, we need action nationally and locally both to raise awareness of the risks associated with passive smoking and to increase the prevalence of smoke free environments. The Department will continue to encourage the development of smoke-free policies, working with employers and communities.

Locally, the Department is funding tobacco control alliances across England to work in communities to raise awareness and to increase the number of smoke-free environments. Findings from these projects will inform future development of the Department's work in this area.

The Department will, in addition to action already under way, develop education and information resources to raise awareness and understanding of the risks associated with passive smoking.

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions have been taken since the Approved Code of Practice on passive smoking was published. [98640]

Ms Blears: The Government consider that if we are to ensure protection against passive smoking in public places, we need action nationally and locally both to raise awareness of the risks associated with passive smoking and to increase the prevalence of smoke free environments. The Department of Health will continue to encourage the development of smoke-free policies, working with employers and communities.

At a national level the Department of Health has, since 1998, worked with the hospitality industry to reduce the problem of exposure to passive smoking through the development of a Public Places Charter. An independent evaluation of the Charter is being commissioned, and further work will be considered on the basis of the findings.

The Government are giving careful consideration to the Health and Safety Commission's proposals for an approved code of practice (AcoP). We encourage all employers to introduce smoke-free workplaces, but are particularly concerned about the implications such a code would have for the hospitality sector and small businesses. While consideration of the AcoP continues, other action is being taken to encourage the provision of smoke-free areas in public and workplaces. We recognise that making places entirely smoke free is not always going to be possible and encourage in these circumstances other measures to be taken to reduce people's exposure to smoke.

Locally, the Department is funding tobacco control alliances across England to work in communities to raise awareness and to increase the number of smoke-free environments. Findings from these projects will inform future development of the Department's work in this area.

The Department of Health will, in addition to action already under way, develop education and information resources to raise awareness and understanding of the risks associated with passive smoking.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been successful in giving up smoking as a result of the "Together" programme; how many people have participated in the programme; how much the programme has cost since it was established; and what assessment he has made of its success rate. [100784]

Ms Blears: The "Together" programme is a six-month pilot study launched on 9 January to determine the effectiveness of long-term support for smokers wishing to give up.

As at 28 February, a total of 4,072 smokers had registered to participate in the programme. 2,387 of these participants are known to have given up smoking but it is too early to make any estimate of long-term success.

£537,000 has been allocated to the programme.

Carers

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent assessment he has made of the quality of services available to the parent carers of children with physical and learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement; [102282]

(2) what support is available to the parent carers of children with physical and learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement; [102281]

(3) what recent discussions he has had with representatives of parent carers of children with physical and learning difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [102283]

Jacqui Smith: Disabled children receive a range of care and support from the national health service and social services departments. This includes: medical and nursing support; family support, including short-term breaks and domiciliary care; advice and guidance; residential provision; self-care and independent skills training; drop-in clubs and groups; activities at family centres and transition support services.

As part of the Government's £885 million "Quality Protects" programme, we set national objectives for children's social services. Through inspections monitoring and annual reviews, the Department's social services inspectorate monitors progress by individual authorities towards the achievement of these objectives. They include specific sub-objectives for disabled children, which are a priority area in the "Quality Protects" programme.

Last year's "Quality Protects" management action plans (MAPS) show that local authorities are beginning to improve the services they provide to disabled children, including the provision of more family support services, such as home-based respite care and sitting services, and better planning and delivery of services jointly with health and education. There has also been an increase in the number of families being supported. In late 2001, the children in need survey found that social services were supporting 29,700 disabled children: a 2 per cent. increase on the position in 2000. The introduction of direct payments for parents with disabled children is enabling greater choice and greater control over the way services are delivered. Next year, in 2003–04, the "Quality Protects" money earmarked for disabled children will double: from £15 million to £30 million.

We are also increasing the provision of short-term breaks through the carers' grant, which was first introduced in 1999 in order to provide breaks for carers, including parents of disabled children. Last year children's social services provided 52,400 carers with short-term breaks funded by this grant: an increase of 21,400 from the previous year. The majority of those receiving a short-term break were parents of disabled children. The grant is increasing on a yearly basis. This year the grant is £85 million. Next year it will rise to £100 million, and by 2005–06 it will have risen to £185 million.

The Government are providing funding to Contact a Family, of £500,00 per annum, to run a national information centre for parents of disabled children. The free 0808 national telephone help and advice line has been widely used. In the year ending 31 March 2002, it had received nearly 9,000 calls. By the end of 2004, it is estimated that this figure will have risen to 21,000 a year.

Ministers and officials hold regular discussions with groups representing parents of disabled children about the development and implementation of policy including the implementation of the "Quality Protects" programme and the development of the children's national service framework (NSF). We have set up an external working group to develop NSF standards for disabled children. This includes two parents of disabled children and representatives from the Council for Disabled Children, Contact a Family, SCOPE, MENCAP and the Association of Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus.

Untoward Incidents (Health Trusts)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS hospital trusts have an action plan to reduce the number of elderly people who fall in hospital; and whether these action plans include introducing bed guards or fall monitors for high-risk patients; [100514]

(2) what action he is taking to reduce the number of elderly people who fall in hospital wards; [100512]

(3) how many elderly people were delayed from hospital discharge in the last quarter because of a fall within a hospital. [100513]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not collect information centrally on the number of older people affected by falls during a hospital stay. In-patient central records monitor why a patient has entered a hospital but do not necessarily record subsequent changes to the reason they are being cared for in hospital.

The national service framework for older people, published in 2001, requires all hospitals to recognise, assess and minimise the risks that hospital admission can pose for older people, as part of good management.

The Government have established the national patient safety agency to improve the safety of national Health service patient care by introducing a national reporting and learning system for adverse events and by promoting an open and fair culture.

NHS Estates is also developing guidance for hospital facilities for older people and this will include reference to patient safety, including falls.

Unemployment Benefit

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many unemployed people in the City of York parliamentary constituency claimed unemployment benefit in each year since 1979. [102636]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Office for National Statistics to Hugh Bayley dated 18 March 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about how many unemployed people in the City of York Parliamentary Constituency claimed unemployment benefit in each year since 1979.

Information on the claimant count, that is the numbers claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or previous unemployment benefits by Parliamentary Constituency are available monthly, but only from June 1983 onwards. The data are not fully comparable over time. Figures for parliamentary constituencies from January 1996 were based on the ward boundaries of the 1991 census. Data before were based on the 1981 ward boundaries.

The attached table shows the annual average claimant level in the City of York Parliamentary constituency for the year 1983 to 2002.

Annual average levels of claimant count in the City of York Parliamentary Constituency

Advertising Costs

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Inland Revenue spent on advertising in 2001–02. [102869]

Dawn Primarolo: For figures for 2001–02 I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) 7 May 2002, Official Report, column 36W.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Valuation Office Agency spent on advertising in 2002–03. [102868]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer which the Financial Secretary gave to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 1061W-1063W.

Budget Statement

Pete Wishart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps will be taken to ensure that official support for the Budget statement will be in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments. [103666]

Dawn Primarolo: Holding the Budget announcement on 9 April is fully consistent with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments. The guidance emphasises that care should be taken during the election period to ensure that Government resources are not used, or seen to be used, for party political purposes. This will be the case in the context of the Budget.

Compliance Costs

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the compliance costs of a Budget date beyond the end of the 2002–03 financial year; and if he will make a statement. [102880]

Dawn Primarolo: Any costs will be negligible.

Correspondence

Mr. Siôn Simon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington of 4 February 2003, concerning regulations under section 42 of the Tax Credits Act 2002. [103175]

Dawn Primarolo: I have done so.

Council Tax

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the proportion of income households in each income decile pay in council tax (a) net of council tax benefit and (b) gross; what assumptions on take-up were made in coming to the estimate; and if he will make a statement. [102867]

John Healey: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 18 March 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the proportion of income that households pay in council tax within each income decile. (102867)

Estimates for council taxes are based on the analysis "The effects of taxes and benefits on household income 2000–01" produced by the ONS and published on the National Statistics website on April 19th 2002 and in Economic Trends in the May 2002 edition. The analysis can be obtained from the House of Commons library. This includes measures of income inequality for the United Kingdom as a whole based on data from the Family Expenditure Survey.

The attached table shows the estimated gross and net council tax for all households in Great Britain and for each income decile where households are ranked by equivalised disposable income. As council tax does not exist in Northern Ireland, the figures shown relate to Great Britain only. The net council tax figures are gross council tax less benefits and discounts.

Council tax benefit is available to low income households to help them meet their local tax liability. The Family Expenditure Survey collects data on the amount of council tax benefit received by households who take up their entitlement. Where a household reports taking up their council tax benefit entitlement, this has been deducted from the council tax liability to produce the net figures.

Dormant Accounts

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue next intends to calculate the total amount held in dormant bank accounts. [102938]

Ruth Kelly: The Inland Revenue has no plans to undertake an exercise to estimate the total amount held on deposit in dormant bank accounts.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what method was employed by the Inland Revenue in its 1997 study to calculate the total amount held in dormant bank accounts. [102939]

Ruth Kelly: The Inland Revenue conducted a desk review of publicly available information.

Equitable Life

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what special tests relating to matching assets and liabilities were made in the case of Equitable Life in the last 10 years. [103479]

Ruth Kelly: None. Equitable Life is subject to the same standard of prudential supervision as other regulated firms.

Exports

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are being taken to improve and protect the world market share of exports of merchandise of the United Kingdom, with particular reference to exports to the Eurozone. [101971]

Nigel Griffiths: I have been asked to reply.

The Government promote open trade globally through a range of policies including its support for the Doha Development Round of trade negotiations and the European Single Market. Through Trade Partners UK, the Government aim to enhance the competitiveness of companies in the UK through overseas sales and investment.

TPUK is currently providing support to more than 1,500 companies under its flagship "TPUK—your passport to export success" initiative to develop new and novice exporters.

Income Tax

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of income is paid in tax by those earning (a) the lowest 20 per cent. and (b) the top 5 per cent. in earnings; and if he will make a statement. [102505]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated from the New Earnings Survey that the 20th percentile point and the 95th percentile point are £14,350 and £53,600 respectively.

Estimates are in the following table.

Total income range	Income tax as a percentage of total income
Less than £14,350	6
£53,600 and over	31

The estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and are consistent with the November 2002 pre-Budget report.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Inland Revenue has spent on its internet tax return system since its inception; what the estimated (a) manning and (b) set-up costs were; what estimate he has made of the percentage of tax payers that will use the system; and if he will make a statement. [102507]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue has spent a total of £34.5 million on its internet service for Self Assessment since it's inception. This includes the full range of costs, including the costs of IT Infrastructure, Development and staff costs as well as other associated costs such as postage and marketing.

(a) The estimated costs are as follows:

April 2000-April 2001: £1,056,000

April 2001-April 2002: £1,588,000

April 2002-April 2003: £2,065,000

(b) As my answer of 19 July 2001, Official Report, column 382W, set out, the estimated cost of implementing the Internet service for Self Assessment for years one and two was just under £10 million.

The Inland Revenue has estimated that 25 per cent. of taxpayers will file electronically by 2005–06.

Insurance

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with insurance companies about the effect on the (a) quarrying and (b) construction industries of increases in insurance premiums; and if he will make a statement. [103480]

Ruth Kelly: Ministers and officials from HM Treasury and other Government departments have regular discussions with the insurance industry on a range of issues, including the cost of insurance premiums.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he plans to introduce to mitigate the effects of high insurance premiums on (a) companies and (b) self-employed people. [103481]

Ruth Kelly: The Government is aware of the recent increase in insurance premiums and the problems faced by some businesses in obtaining affordable insurance cover. The Department for Work and Pensions is currently reviewing the operation of Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance. The review will report to Ministers in spring.

Clive Efford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he will respond to the report from the Financial Services Authority on the regulation of the sale of travel insurance by tour operators and travel agents; [103748]

(2) what representations he has received regarding regulation of the sale of travel insurance; [103749]

(3) what proportion of complaints about travel insurance were from customers whose policies were sold to them by (a) tour operators, (b) travel agents and (c) insurance companies; [103752]

(4) what plans he has to ensure that all companies involved in the sale of travel insurance are regulated by the Financial Services Authority; [103750]

(5) what assessment he has made of the benefits to consumers of a different system of regulation for the sale of travel insurance by tour operators and travel agents to that which applies to insurance companies; [103753]

(6) if he will require companies selling travel insurance to itemise charges made to the customer and the cover purchased at the time of purchase. [103751]

Ruth Kelly: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave in response to my hon. Friend the Member for Workington (Tony Cunningham) on 27 February 2003, Official Report, column 388.

Mapeley

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Grimsby of 29 January 2003, Official Report, columns 300–01W, on Mapeley, if the Inland Revenue has access to Mapeley's accounts. [99135]

Dawn Primarolo: Under the terms of the STEPS contract, the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise have access to the accounts of Mapeley STEPS Contractors Ltd. only.

Mortgages

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of mortgages were re-mortgages of the same property, and if he will estimate the size of mortgage equity withdrawal, in each year since 1997. [103424]

Ruth Kelly: The Council for mortgage lenders reported that 51 per cent. of mortgages were re-mortgages in January 2003. Bank of England publish figures for mortgage equity withdrawal in terms of both the level and as a percentage of disposable income on their website at: www.bankofengland.co.uk/mew.xls.

National Insurance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of (a) working age adults and (b) adults in work whose National Insurance contributions were (i) incomplete and (ii) incorrectly recorded in each of the last 10 years. [102607]

Dawn Primarolo: We estimate there are around 43 million NI accounts relating to people of working age. Information about the number of adults in work whose NI contributions were incomplete or incorrectly recorded in each of the last 10 years is not held.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the accuracy of records of National Insurance contributions; and if he will make a statement; [102609]

(2) what safeguards are in place to ensure that gaps recorded within individual National Insurance contribution records do not arise from (a) error and (b) fraud. [102606]

Dawn Primarolo: The accuracy of National Insurance records depends primarily on information that has been received and processed from employers, Pensions Providers, other Government Departments and individual contributors. The Inland Revenue has a number of systems and operational processes in place to continually validate and review the accuracy of each National Insurance record. The Government's plans to encourage more employers to submit payroll data electronically should also help to improve the accuracy of National Insurance records. In addition to the routine validation checks, the Inland Revenue visit employers to check the accuracy of their records, guard against fraud and to provide support to help them get things right.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what documents were signed by married women remaining on the married women's stamp in 1977 to 1979; how many such documents were issued; and if he will place a copy of the documents in the Library. [103709]

Dawn Primarolo: Married women who wanted to continue to pay the Married Women's Reduced rate of National Insurance did not have to sign any documents. However, women who wanted to pay the full rate of National Insurance contributions had to complete the declaration (Form CF9) in the back of leaflet N1. A copy of this leaflet is held in the House Library.

National Savings and Investments

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many successful traces have been concluded by National Savings and Investments on dormant savings and investments in each month since November 2001; [102935]

(2) what progress has been made by the tracing service for dormant savings and investments by National Savings and Investments since its introduction. [102936]

Ruth Kelly: National Savings and Investments' new Tracing Service was launched in November 2001. Information is available on a monthly basis from February 2002, with the results for the first three months (November 2001 to January 2002) only available on a consolidated basis. To date, about 35 per cent. of all requests have resulted in successful traces. The number and value of successful traces are as follows:

Successful traces of dormant savings and investments

	Number	Value (£)
November 2001 to January 2002	876	904,303
February 2002	475	441,684
March 2002	504	745,443
April 2002	89	303,042
May 2002	652	1,132,539
June 2002	189	483,025
July 2002	409	264,485
August 2002	323	105,322
September 2002	253	168,943
October 2002	151	163,007
November 2002	244	74,235
December 2002	307	189,401
January 2003	412	291,578
February 2003	560	408,031
Total	5,444	5,675,038

Net Investment Statistics

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 6 March 2003, Official Report, column 1222W, on public sector net investment statistics, if he will make it his policy to publish net investment statistics by Department monthly; and if he will make a statement. [102889]

Ruth Kelly: No.

Personal Income

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the (a) gross and (b) taxable income of individuals in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland in the latest year for which data is available; and if he will make a statement. [102876]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of (a) gross and (b) taxable income of taxpayers in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland in 2000–01 are set out in the following table.

£ million

Government region	Gross income	Taxable income
England	513,300	380,700
Wales	21,900	15,000
Scotland	45,400	32,300
Northern Ireland	11,500	8,100

Estimates are based on Survey of Personal Incomes in 2000–01.

Public Spending

Mr. Howard Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of his Department's rules on public spending; and what plans he has to revise these guidelines. [102689]

Mr. Boateng: The 1998 Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report set out the Government's new framework for the planning and controlling of public expenditure. This framework was implemented with the plans set out in the 1998 Comprehensive Spending Review. Further modernisation of the regime has taken place through the implementation in two stages of resource accounting and budgeting in the 2000 and 2002 Spending Reviews.

Self-assessment

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what target the Inland Revenue has set for the number of individual taxpayers filing self-assessment tax returns by 2005; and if he will make a statement. [102877]

Dawn Primarolo: The Revenue do not have targets for the number of individual taxpayers who are required to file SA returns. The target for the percentage of 2001–02 returns issued by 31 October 2002 and filed by the January 2003 filing date was 90.5 per cent. This target was reached.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the (a) filing and (b) other costs of the self-assessment tax system in each year since 1998; and if he will make a statement. [102878]

Dawn Primarolo: The costs of collecting income tax and other taxes are set out each year in the Inland Revenue Annual Reports, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. The costs of administering and collecting income tax cover a variety of integrated tax regimes and systems of which Self Assessment is one. Some significant costs are shared across these regimes and cannot be meaningfully apportioned to particular regimes or systems. No figures are available for the total costs of Self Assessment in isolation.

Student Debts

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt parents from the tax implications of paying off the higher education debts of their children. [103681]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no such plans.

Tax Credits

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates his Department has made of the costs of the promotional campaign for the new tax credits, broken down by (a) design, print and production of promotional materials, (b) television and radio advertisements, (c) press advertising, (d) online design related website costs and (e) the provision of faxback facilities. [102416]

Dawn Primarolo: The spend on the promotional campaign for the new tax credit is currently estimated as follows:

(a) design, print and production of promotional materials	95
(b) media costs for:
television advertisements	8,016
radio advertisements	876
(c) press advertising	2,224
(d) online advertising	400
(e) the provision of faxback facilities	15

Note:

All estimated costs include VAT

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend the child care tax credit to grandparents caring for their grandchildren. [102799]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no plans to make the childcare element of Working Tax Credit available in respect of grandparents caring for their grandchildren under informal arrangements or while acting as a home childcarer. But if grandparents are registered childcare providers, and provide childcare for their grandchildren outside the children's home, then the cost of their services will count as eligible childcare for the purposes of claiming the childcare element of the Working Tax Credit, which will be introduced from April.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the component costs were of each tax credit which contributes to the 2003–04 tax credit lines of (a) table B12 of page 197, (b) table B17 of page 205 and (c) table B9 of page 193 of the November 2002 Pre-Budget Report (Cm 5664); and if he will make a statement. [99394]

Dawn Primarolo: The following table shows a breakdown of the tax credit lines of the 2002 Pre-Budget Report Tables B12 and B9 for 2003–04.

£ billion

Children's Tax Credit and negative tax element of new tax credits[2]	-4.3	N/a	-2.2
Reduced liability corporation tax, tax credits	-0.5	0.5	0.1
Other[3]	-0.1	0.1	0.0
Total	-4.9	0.6	-2.1

[1] These figures are the change between Budget 2002 and PBR 2002

[2] New tax credits consist of the Child Tax Credit and the Working Tax Credit, which will be introduced from April 2003. They will replace the Working Families' Tax Credit (WFTC), the Disabled Person's Tax Credit (DPTC), the Children's Tax Credit and the New Deal Employment credit for the over 50s and income related elements of support for children in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance.

[3] Consists of the negative tax elements of LAPRAS (life assurance premium relief), WFTC and DPTC.

Between Budget 2002 and the 2002 Pre-Budget Report, the estimated split of total tax credits between that scored as tax and that scored as public expenditure was revised, with the negative tax element now about £2 billion a year higher from 2003–04 onwards. This accounts for almost all of the change seen in Table B9. These revisions are balanced by changes in the public expenditure element of tax credits, and have no overall impact on the current balance or net borrowing. In 2003–04, the tax credit line in Table B17 (£11.7 billion) mainly consists of the public expenditure elements of the new tax credits (£7.6 billion) and child allowances in Income Support and Jobseekers' Allowance (£3.7 billion). The remaining £0.4 billion consists of the tax credits accruals adjustments, charities transitional relief, stakeholder pensions and the public expenditure elements of WFTC, DPTC and LAPRAS.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) the average amount of tax evaded and (b) the total amount of tax evaded was in cases pursued by the Inland Revenue's special compliance office which have resulted in convictions, in each year since 1997. [102004]

Dawn Primarolo: The total amount of tax that was the subject of criminal offences successfully prosecuted by the Inland Revenue since 1997 is:

2001–02	6,201,945
2000–01	6,599,539
1999–2000	16,108,650
1998–99	9,575,906
1997–98	16,721,002

Values in particular cases range from less than £1,000 to over £5 million. These variations can cause significant fluctuations from year to year. Given this range of values we believe that average figures are unrepresentative.

Unclaimed Assets

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much has been donated to charities by the Unclaimed Assets Register donations scheme from dormant accounts in each year since its introduction (a) in total and (b) from (i) banks and (ii) building societies; [102910]

(2) how many successful traces have been concluded on dormant accounts in each month since May 2001 by (a) the British Banking Association and (b) the Building Societies Association; [102908]

(3) how many charities have benefited in each year from the Unclaimed Assets Register donations scheme since its introduction; [102911]

(4) how many claims have been received in relation to dormant accounts in each month since May 2001 by (a) the British Banking Association and (b) the Building Societies Association; [102909]

(5) how much total assets have been successfully reunited with owners of dormant accounts in each month since May 2001 by (a) the British Banking Association and (b) the Building Societies Association. [102937]

Ruth Kelly: These are matters for the bodies involved.

VAT Registrations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the stock of VAT registrations was in each city and district within the county of Tyne and Wear in 1996; what the (a) gross and (b) net alterations to that stock were in each subsequent year; what the net alterations to the stock were as a percentage of the 1996 stock; and what the stock of VAT registrations was in 2002. [103732]

John Healey: The information requested on districts can be found on the Small Business Service website: www.sbs.gov.uk.

Data on cities are not available. Figures for 2002 will be available in October 2003.

Water Sprinklers

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will remove the VAT on the purchase and fitting of water sprinklers in domestic properties. [103673]

John Healey: When installed during the construction of a house, water sprinkler systems benefit from the general VAT zero rate that applies to the construction of new houses. Under the long-standing formal agreements with our European partners, the UK may keep its existing zero rates but may not extend their scope or introduce new ones. There is therefore no scope to remove VAT on the installation of water sprinkler systems in existing homes.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the results of the WFTC/DPTC evaluation programme will be released. [100793]

Dawn Primarolo: The results of the WFTC/DPTC evaluation programme will be published in due course.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the reasons for miscalculation of working families' tax credit by the Inland Revenue; how many people were affected; what steps have been taken to correct the miscalculations; how much it has cost to correct the miscalculations; and if he will make a statement. [102508]

Dawn Primarolo: The small percentage of miscalculations in assessing applications for Working Families' Tax Credit (WFTC) arise for a variety of reasons, most commonly problems with the accuracy of the calculation of weekly or monthly earnings in the period leading up to the application. For the new Working Tax Credit and Child Tax Credit, which supersede WFTC, entitlement is not based on earnings for a specified period immediately before the claim. Therefore, the reason for miscalculation within WFTC should be eliminated in future.

For the 2001–02 financial year, the latest full year for which figures are available, over 90 per cent. of all WFTC applications were correctly assessed to the nearest penny. In those cases where a miscalculation is detected, action is taken to correct all underpayments and any overpayments that exceed one pound per week. No information is available on the cost of correcting these mistakes. As confirmed by the National Audit Office, the level of errors made in assessing WFTC applications is low in proportion to the aggregate amount paid.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to publish figures for working families tax credit take-up in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03. [102993]

Dawn Primarolo: No reliable estimate of the take-up rate of the working families' tax credit in 2001–02 can be attempted until the Family Resources Survey for that year is analysed.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Department for Work and Pensions concerning the potential for increased claims against the Social Fund, with particular reference to meeting the costs of additional alignment payments, during the introduction of the new tax credits. [102994]

Dawn Primarolo: The Department for Work and Pensions is working with the Inland Revenue to ensure that there is a seamless transition to the new tax credits system and that there is good liaison between the two organisations to ensure that awards of both tax credits and social security benefits are made promptly to people in the most urgent need. We do not expect to see increased claims for Social Fund alignment payments under the new tax credits.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Miners' Pension Funds

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the funds allocated to her Department from the British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme and the Mineworkers Pension Schemes which remain unpaid will be removed from the pension funds and paid into the consolidated fund. [102763]

Mr. Wilson: The income streams from the Guarantor's Funds already created from valuation surpluses of each Scheme are payable to the Consolidated Fund in instalments over 10 year periods, the last of which will end in 2010–11.

Releases from the Investment Reserves are determined by the Schemes' actuary following completion of each actuarial valuation. As part of the Guarantee discussions with the Trustees last year, it was agreed in principle to extend the lifetime of the Investment Reserve beyond the 25 years agreed in 1994.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the entitlement of Her Majesty's Treasury is to sums from (a) the British Coal Staff Superannuation Scheme and (b) the Mineworkers Pension Scheme that have accrued but are yet to be paid. [102771]

Mr. Wilson: The actual amounts received by the Government will depend on future investment returns and any amounts applied in support of the pension guarantee as determined by the Schemes' periodic valuations.

Brazilian Sugar Industry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the level of public subsidy involved in the expansion of the Brazilian sugar industry. [100630]

Nigel Griffiths: I am told the DTI has no knowledge of public subsidy being applied to the expansion of the Brazilian sugar industry.

British Energy

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether public funding to British Energy is being used to provide financial support in the cost of installing flue gas de-sulphurisation at British Energy's coal-fired Eggborough Power Station. [101921]

Mr. Wilson: The credit facility was provided to British Energy in respect of its working capital requirements and cash collateral for its trading activities. Details of individual payments are commercially confidential. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, told the House on 7 March 2003, Official Report, column 89WS, BE have repaid all outstanding amounts under the credit facility.

Coal Mine Methane Energy

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent research has been conducted by her Department into the technology for coal mine methane capture; and what representations she has received on it. [102066]

Mr. Wilson: Technology for coal mine methane capture is considered a relatively mature technology, employed and proven at several mine sites in the UK, and therefore no recent research has been conducted into the technology.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many coal mine methane capture and generation plants she expects private companies to develop in the next three years. [102067]

Mr. Wilson: The number of coal mine methane capture and generation plants which could be developed by private companies in the next three years is a decision for industry to make in the light of market conditions, and not a decision for government.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons coal mine methane capture and electricity generation from disused coalmines receives no form of incentive through Government programmes. [102068]

Mr. Wilson: The Government recognise and value the benefits the coal mine methane industry provides by tapping the methane emissions from disused coal mines and putting them to good use for generation of electricity. We have already demonstrated this support through our securing exemption from the Climate Change Levy for electricity generated from CMM in last year's budget, and this is currently being cleared with the European Commission. In addition, we concluded from our investigations that the environmental benefits of CMM-use can also be rewarded using the Emissions Trading Scheme (ETS), and hence we support the study DEFRA has commissioned to determine a baseline for CMM emissions that could enable it to qualify for this Scheme.

Electricity Suppliers

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to reduce the barriers to entry faced by potential small suppliers of electricity to the national grid. [103037]

Mr. Wilson: We recognise that smaller generators have concerns about the NETA market that operates in England and Wales. Significant improvements have been made since the start of NETA, particularly to improve cost reflectivity of imbalance prices and reduce imbalance price risk, which should particularly help smaller generators. There have also been improvements to reduce barriers to the consolidation of the output of smaller generators.

The Government recently announced its intention to bring forward the Electricity (Trading and Transmission) Bill as soon as Parliamentary time allows in order to implement a GB market. The draft Bill is currently undergoing pre-legislative scrutiny. The improvements above and any future improvements will be carried across to the wider GM market.

As part of this project, the DTI, jointly with Ofgem, will shortly be issuing a consultation document on the treatment of smaller generators under BETTA. This will look specifically at any barriers to entry that may be faced by smaller generators who are connecting to the transmission system in Scotland.

Gulf States

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the level of bilateral trade was with (a) Bahrain, (b) Abu Dhabi and (c) Yemen in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [103221]

Nigel Griffiths: According to information published by HM Customs and Excise, UK trade in goods for 2002 was as follows:

£ million

	UK imports	UK exports
Bahrain	77.7	132.4
Abu Dhabi	160.1	213.4
Yemen	39.8	74.0

Licence Boundaries (Wales)

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many responses to the DTI consultation on licence boundaries were received regarding Wales; and how many expressed support for licence boundaries to include areas totally within the boundaries of the devolved Administration. [103456]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 17 March 2003]: 19 responses were received to the consultation. Two of these expressed support for a licence boundary following the border of Wales — those from MLL, a telecoms provider, and the Welsh Advisory Committee on Telecommunications.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria were used by the Government to decide the allocation of regions for the auction of 3.4GHz wireless broadband licences; and if she will make a statement about the proposal to disregard the geographical Welsh border. [103458]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 17 March 2003]: The 3.4GHz licence packaging was designed to increase competition and availability of broadband services across the UK. The licence regions were drawn up following market and economic studies to be as economically viable and inclusive as possible, maximising the potential development of sustainable wireless services and the broadband market throughout the UK.

Dividing up spectrum at 3.4GHz along the lines of funded regions, as suggested by the Welsh National Assembly, would produce more areas of the UK with no coverage. It would also lead to a lower capacity—that is, fewer broadband customers in Wales who can be supported, given the spectrum available.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations her Department received from the National Assembly for Wales on allocating regions for the forthcoming auction of 3.4GHz wireless broadband licences; and if she will make a statement; [103459]

(2) what representations the Secretary of State has received from (a) the National Assembly for Wales and (b) others in Wales on the proposed licence boundaries for the forthcoming auction of 3.4GHz wireless broadband licence. [103457]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Consultation on the allocation of 3.4GHz public fixed wireless access (PFWA) licences began on 19 December 2000, when the Radiocommunications Agency ("RA"), on behalf of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, published a consultative document entitled "3.4 and 10 GHz: Scenarios for Spectrum Packaging and Delivery". This consultation document presented a number of scenarios for packaging and delivering licences to establish and use stations and apparatus for wireless telegraphy in the 3.4 and 10GHz bands for the provision of Fixed Wireless Access services ("FWA").

Following a detailed review of the responses to the December consultation document and the completion of further technical studies in the 3.4GHz and 10GHz bands a further consultation document, "PFWA: Proposal by the RA to package and deliver licences at 3.4GHz", published in April 2002, set out the proposal to award spectrum licences for the 3.4GHz band.

Both consultations were carried out nationally and all Government Departments and devolved Administrations were invited, along with industry and the public, to be involved and comment on the proposals. Among the many comments received and meetings held, RA received input and held discussions with officials of the National Assembly for Wales on numerous occasions. This included a proposal from the Welsh Assembly Government for two licences to match EU objective funding areas in Wales. This proposal was included in the public consultation process alongside those of the Scottish Administration and RA.

Of the responses to the consultation, only one industry response expressed support for the proposals from the devolved Administrations, MLL, a telecoms provider with operations in Wales. One industry response to Government's consultation commented "creating two purely Welsh regions could result in insufficient market potential in viable geographic coverage spreads to justify serious bidding". The Welsh Advisory Committee on Telecommunications, part of the Welsh National Assembly, also expressed support.

Since the timetable of the award was announced there have been representations from Welsh National Assembly members about licence areas. Further consideration has been given to this issue but I believe the packaging, which has been accepted by the majority of industry, will produce the best outcome both for Wales and for the UK as a whole.

In particular, it will enable a larger number of users to be supported in Wales, given the spectrum available, than the alternative proposal.

LINK Programme

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance she has issued to the assessors of applications for funding to the LINK Programme in respect of the provision of feedback to unsuccessful applicants. [101877]

Ms Hewitt: LINK is a pan-government scheme for the support of collaborative research between UK companies and the science base. It consists of a number of individual programmes which have their own management and feedback procedures agreed by the sponsoring Departments in line with overall LINK Scheme guidelines which aim to ensure that constructive and unambiguous feedback is provided. Each programme funds a number of projects.

I believe that my hon. Friend has a particular interest in the LINK Basic Technologies for Industrial Applications programme. Within this programme, all projects are assessed by an independent panel against the criteria for support for the programme, which are included in the guidance notes to applicants and published on the programme website at www.basictechnologies.gov.uk. Aspects considered in assessing project proposals include: the level of innovation including the potential for a step-change in industrial capability; the risks and likely rewards in using the new technology; the feasibility of the proposed approach; the quality, relevant expertise and resources of the consortium; the range of potential beneficiaries; the strength of the UK science base in the technical areas involved; the potential for lasting benefit to UK capability beyond the life of the project; and the level of wider industrial interest.

The programme coordinator provides feedback on the panel's recommendations to all applicants and has been asked to point out both the strengths and weaknesses in the proposal in line with the assessment criteria above. Where possible, guidance is also provided to the unsuccessful applicants on other possible sources of funding where these can be identified. As 140 outline proposals were received under the current call, it was not possible to provide immediate detailed written feedback to all applicants. However, applicants could telephone or e-mail the coordinator for further feedback on the panel's recommendation and over 50 consortia did. With funds available to offer support to less than 20 projects, only the projects which best met all the criteria were invited to come forward as full proposals and inevitably some good projects were rejected.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications for funding have been made to the LINK Programme in the current financial year; and what the (a) name, (b) subject and (c) cost is of each application which has been approved. [101878]

Ms Hewitt: LINK is a pan-government scheme for the support of collaborative research between UK companies and the science base. It consists of a number of individual programmes which run their own calls for proposals. There are currently 25 programmes open for applications. Each programme funds a number of projects.

I believe that my hon. Friend has a particular interest in the LINK Basic Technologies for Industrial Applications programme. In the case of this programme, a call for proposals was announced by my noble Friend, the Minister for Science and Innovation on 26 July 2002, with a closing date of 7 November 2002. 140 outline applications were received, of which 20 were invited to come forward as full proposals to the second stage of the appraisal process. 19 full proposals were received by the closing date of 20 February 2003 and are now being assessed by an independent panel of industrial and academic experts. Therefore, at this stage, no projects have been approved for funding under the programme.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what management arrangements she has established for processing applications under the LINK Programme; and if she will make a statement. [101879]

Ms Hewitt: LINK is a pan-government scheme for the support of collaborative research between UK companies and the science base. It consists of a number of individual programmes which have their own management procedures agreed by the sponsoring Departments in line with overall LINK Scheme guidelines. Each programme funds a number of projects.

I believe that my hon. Friend has a particular interest in the LINK Basic Technologies for Industrial Applications programme. In the case of this programme, my Department is the primary sponsor and has established a 2-stage process for assessing applications to minimise unnecessary work for applicants whose projects may not be strong candidates for support.

Initial outline proposals, consisting of a 3-page project description with a covering application form, are submitted to the programme co-ordinators by the advertised closing date. These proposals are then circulated to an appraisal panel of independent industrial and academic experts, who assess the proposals against the programme's criteria for support, in particular, the degree of innovation and the potential long-term wider benefit for UK productivity. The panel, which has an independent chairman from industry, meets to review the proposals and recommends those which it considers should come forward as full proposals, bearing in mind the funds available for commitment. The project applicants are then informed of the panel's recommendation by e-mail. A telephone contact number and e-mail address are provided for applicants who wish to seek further feedback or discuss the panel's recommendation. The target for the process from closing date to notification is 30 working days, which was achieved in the call currently under way which involved 140 applications. With such a large number of applications, it is not possible to give detailed feedback to all the applicants within the stated target times for processing.

The projects invited to submit full proposals are given a closing date for submission about two months after notification. They are provided with feedback from the appraisal panel and visited by the programme co-ordinators or officials to provide advice on preparing a full application. The full application consists of a 10-page project description with technical annexes plus a LINK summary application form and application forms from each of the consortium members summarising company and financial information. The full proposals are again circulated to the appraisal panel and additional input is sought from other experts where appropriate. The panel meets to review all the proposals and recommends to DTI those which should be supported. The proposals are ranked to enable the available funds to be assigned to the strongest proposals. The applicants are notified of the recommendations of the panel which indicate that, subject to satisfactory financial arrangements being completed, the project will be offered grant support. The target to complete the process from closing date to notification is 40 working days.

Information on the programme, including application forms and guidance notes for applicants, are available on the programme website at www.basictechnologies.gov.uk, which is maintained by the programme co-ordinators.

Miners' Compensation

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been paid since 31 December 2002 in respect of (a) chronic bronchitis and emphysema and (b) vibration white finger to former miners; how much has been paid to (i) solicitors and (ii) handling agents; and how much has been paid for medical assessments. [102850]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 17 March 2003]: The information is as follows:

£ million

	COPD	VWF	Total
Total damages paid (1 January 2003 to 9 March 2003)	94	46.1	140.1
Total solicitor costs (1 January 2003 to 9 March 2003)	26.4	4	30.4
Other costs which include payments to contractors* (1 January 2003 to 28 February 2003)	—	—	14.3

* Due to commercial confidentiality, the Department is unable to provide a breakdown of the figures paid to individual contractors.

Motor Fuel

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many motor fuel retailers were trading in (a) 1997 and (b) the most recent year for which figures are available. [103047]

Mr Wilson: The Institute of Petroleum's (IP) annual "Retail Survey 2002" provides the following data on the number of retail petrol filling stations in the UK.

End of 1997—14,824

End of 2002—12,201

Nuclear Industry

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes she plans to make in the security regulations covering the civil nuclear industry; what costs will be incurred in the proposed changes; what additional resources she is making available to the Office of Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS) to implement the regulations; and when she expects to receive the next annual report of the OCNS. [103089]

Mr. Wilson: On 26 February I made the Nuclear Industries Security Regulations which will update and consolidate the regulation of security in the UK's civil nuclear industry. The regulations carry forward the main substance of the current regulatory regime, but bring the existing requirements together to provide a single, comprehensive legislative basis for regulation. They set requirements for the protection of nuclear and radiological material, whether on sites or in transit, against the risks of theft or sabotage, and for the protection of sensitive nuclear information, such as site security arrangements and proliferation-sensitive information.

The regulations were laid before Parliament on 28 February and most of the provisions are due to come into force on 22 March.

It is likely that the regulations will lead to minor additional one-off compliance costs to industry as a whole of around £190,000, and annually recurring costs to industry as a whole of around £115,000. There are also likely to be minor additional one-off costs to Government. The likely costs and benefits of the regulations are set out in a Regulatory Impact Assessment. Copies of this were placed in the Libraries of the House when the regulations were laid before Parliament.

Seven additional posts were made available in the Office for Civil Nuclear Security from 2002–03, to increase capacity in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks in the United States in September 2001 and in anticipation of the Nuclear Industries Security Regulations 2003 coming into force.

The Director of Civil Nuclear Security intends to submit his next annual report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in May.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to engage stakeholders in discussion of proposals to create a nuclear decommissioning agency (NDA); what funds are available to defray the costs of participation in discussion forums by stakeholders of the NDA; and if she will make a statement. [103090]

Mr. Wilson: My officials are actively engaging with interested stakeholders, in particular through a planned rolling series of meetings at regional level. The first round of these meetings is focusing on explaining progress to date and identifying the issues which stakeholders wish to discuss. The second round, in the summer, will focus on how the NDA might work with stakeholders with a view to developing a draft stakeholder engagement framework which the NDA can build on once it is in place. This programme of regional events supplements existing arrangements for bilateral dialogue with stakeholders through the BNFL Stakeholder Dialogue and regular meetings with the nuclear regulators, trade unions, BNFL and UKAEA staff, Interested local authorities, environmental groups and the local liaison committees for individual sites.

I recognise that some stakeholders incur costs through their participation in such meetings. We have previously reimbursed any reasonable costs on a case by case basis and will continue to do so.

Nuclear Pollution

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how much has been levied in fines by the Nuclear Inspectorate against (a) companies, (b) local authorities and (c) individuals, with regard to incidences of pollution, broken down by the type of pollution incidence (i) in total, (ii) in each region and (iii) per fine, in each year since 1995; [99210]

(2) what assessment has been made or is planned of the effectiveness of fines levied by the Nuclear Inspectorate on polluters preventing (a) further incidences of pollution by the polluters and (b) incidences of pollution from others who have not previously polluted; what changes are planned; and if she will make a statement; [99211]

(3) how many (a) complaints, (b) court actions and (c) fines against the nuclear industry for problems related to (i) odours, (ii) water pollution, (iii) air pollution and (iv) human health impact, (A) in total, (B) in each region and (C) per site there have been in each year since 1995. [99212]

Mr. Wilson: The DTI does not hold information broken down according to the categories set out in these questions with respect to complaints or court actions arising from instances or alleged instances of pollution and any ascribed effects on health.

Office of Fair Trading

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she plans to advertise for the positions of chairman and board members to replace the Director General of Fair Trading; and if she will make a statement. [102784]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Director General of Fair Trading (DGFT) was advised in his appointment letter dated 13 July 2000 that he would be appointed chairman if the Enterprise Bill was enacted. He was formally appointed chairman (and therefore executive member of the Office of Fair Trading) from 6 January 2003, following royal assent to the Enterprise Act 2002, under section 13 of the Interpretation Act 1978. This appointment ends on 30 September 2005.

Advertisements for the non-executive members appeared in June 2002, with a closing date of 26 July 2002. Following the interview process, and then consultation with the chairman, four selected appointees were announced in a press notice P/2003/32 dated 21 January 2003 available in the Libraries of the House. These roles will commence under the Enterprise Act 2002 with the new Office of Fair Trading and the end of their appointment terms are staggered between 2007 and 2008.

The current deputy of the DGFT is also being appointed as an executive member from 1 April 2003 for four years (in same press notice).

The department will consult the new board on plans for the appointments of separate Chair and Chief Executive when John Vickers leaves in 2005, but no further action is required this year.

Pressure Equipment Directive

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the difficulties of professional copper boiler makers in complying with the Pressure Equipment Directive. [102759]

Alan Johnson: The Department is aware of the problems of small businesses operating in the heritage sphere that need to comply with CE marking directives. Arrangements were put in place last year offering help to them with the start up costs they incur in respect of third party verification and inspection services required to CE mark some of their products. In the case of copper boilermakers and the Pressure Equipment Regulations 1999, the Department also engaged the services through much of last year of an independent consultant, at public expense to assist them in their compliance efforts. The Department continues to offer advice as appropriate.

Self-employment Pensions

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry from what date the Department of Trade and Industry ensured that life offices that offered Guaranteed Annual Returns for self-employed pensions were matching assets against guarantees given. [103478]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

There are no specific requirements relating to pensions for self-employed people. Life insurers offering personal and stakeholder pensions are subject to the same prudential supervision as other regulated firms.

Spectrum Access

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations her Department has received on the recognised spectrum access scheme proposed in the Communications Bill; and how many of them were (a) in support of and (b) in opposition to the scheme. [101611]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 7 March 2003]: Eight representations have been received by the Department supporting recognised spectrum access and 26 opposing the principle of the scheme or its proposed application to satellite services.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Ministers from her Department have met representatives of the UK satellite industry to discuss the impact of recognised spectrum access on the satellite industry. [101612]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 7 March 2003]: I agreed last month to meet representatives of UK and European satellite operators to discuss recognised spectrum access. The meeting has been arranged for 8 April.

Staff Redundancies

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance she gives on whether firms, when making staff redundant without allowing staff to work their notice period, have to take into account lost pay and benefits pension rights when making payment in lieu of notice. [103395]

Alan Johnson: Employees entitled to notice of dismissal are entitled, where no notice is given, to pay in lieu for the period of notice required. They are also entitled to other benefits, such as pension rights, that would have accrued in respect of that period. This is the position whatever the reason for dismissal except in cases where the employer is justified in dismissing the employee summarily.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions her Department has been notified of significant redundancies planned by (a) AMP, (b) Pearl Assurance and (c) NPI; how many jobs were affected; and in what locations. [103399]

Alan Johnson: I regret it is not possible to disclose details of the number of notifications of proposed redundancies received by the Department. Such information is a confidential matter between the employer and the Department, under Exemption 13, Third Party's commercial confidences, of the Code of Practice on access to Government information.

UK Steel

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with Corus regarding the UK steel industry; and what support and assistance she can provide to the UK steel sector. [103859]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has had a number of discussions with senior management of Corus to discuss its current difficulties. She met Corus board members on 18 March when she again stressed the need for them to develop a workable solution which will return the company to profitability. We must await the outcome of commercial discussions.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact she estimates the present difficulties in the UK steel industry will have on production for military contracts. [103860]

Alan Johnson: It is considered that the UK steel industry will not have any difficulty fulfilling contracts.

Your Guide Project

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the total cost of the Your Guide project in post offices. [103541]

Mr. Timms: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) on 5 November 2002, Official Report, column 157W.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Accountancy Services

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total cost to his Department was for accountancy services in 2002. [101557]

Mr. Blunkett: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Appeals

Mr. Peter Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he last reviewed provision under the Reviews of Sentencing Orders of 1994, 1995 and 2000; when his Department will next review this; and if he will make a statement; [100207]

(2) what representations he has received to extend the range of cases over which the Attorney General has power to refer cases to the Court of Appeal where it appears that sentencing has been unduly lenient; and if he will make a statement; [100209]

(3) what discussions he has had with the Attorney General and the Courts regarding the current provision under Sections 35 and 36 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 and the Reviews of Sentencing Orders of 1994, 1995 and 2000 to refer certain types of case to the Court of Appeal to further review sentencing orders to include further offences; and if he will make a statement. [100210]

Hilary Benn: There is no formal review system in operation for the Unduly Lenient Sentence scheme. New requests to extend the Attorney General's powers to refer unduly lenient sentences are considered by my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General and Lord Chancellor, as and when they are received.

The Home Secretary is sympathetically considering a request from the Attorney General (which has the support of the Lord Chancellor and Lord Chief Justice) to add certain racially aggravated offences to the scheme. This request followed a specific recommendation in a report of a thematic inspection of casework with an ethnic minority dimension, conducted by Her Majesty's Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate.

An amendment was tabled during the Committee Stage of the Courts Bill in another place, to add burglary to the scheme, but this was defeated on 18 February.

The Home Secretary will continue to consider whether any additional offences should be added, and will liaise fully with the Attorney General, Lord Chancellor and Lord Chief Justice in such deliberations.

Asylum Seekers

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applications have been outstanding for (a) more than three months and (b) more than 6 months. [102438]

Beverley Hughes: As at the end of December 2002 the number of asylum applications awaiting an initial decision for more than three months is estimated to be 25,800, of which 21,400 cases were outstanding after more than six months. This includes cases that are currently under consideration and compares with 27,300 and 22,100 such applications as at the end of December 2001, and 72,000 and 60,600 applications as at the end of December 2000.

Provisional data show that 60 per cent. of applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases) received in 2001–02 had initial decisions reached and served within two months, 78 per cent. within four months and 84 per cent. within six months. 76 per cent. of applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases) received in the period April to September 2002 had initial decisions reached and served within two months.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it is taking to process (a) straightforward and (b) non-straightforward cases for (i) asylum and (ii) British citizenship. [102463]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is unavailable and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records. Each asylum claim is assessed on its individual merits, and it is not clear on what criteria an asylum case would be classified as being straightforward or not straightforward. An asylum case, which appears straightforward at the outset, can become more complex later in the asylum process. 76 per cent. of applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases) received in the period April to September 2002 had initial decisions reached and served within two months.

The average time between application and initial decision was six months for initial decisions made in 2002. This has been calculated using all cases for which data are available, including older cases decided as part of the reduction of the backlog, as well as new cases. This compares to 20 months in 1997.

Applications for British citizenship are dealt with upon receipt and are not subdivided into straightforward and non-straightforward applications.

The most recently published data on average processing times for British citizenship relate to applications lodged prior to 31 March 2001, when the average waiting time was 11.6 months.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding arrangements are in place to enable the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to meet the target to halve the number of asylum applicants by September. [102469]

Beverley Hughes: The budget for 2003–04 will be published in the Home Office's main estimates (in the usual way).

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) guidelines and (b) rules the National Asylum Advisory Service gives to contracted companies as to where each asylum seeker can be housed in a cluster. [103182]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 17 March 2003]: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) identified areas suitable for the provision of accommodation to asylum seekers. NASS contracted companies were told where these areas were and that accommodation must be located within the defined areas. All accommodation had to meet a strict specification laid down by NASS. Providers were responsible for ensuring that all necessary planning regulations were met, including local requirements relating to houses in multiple occupation. Additionally, where it is proposed that a single address will have over six bedspaces, there is a requirement that NASS should formally consult the local authority.

Asylum Support Fraud

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the level of (a) fraud and (b) overpayment in respect of claims by landlords for accommodation provided under the NASS asylum support programme has been in each year since the establishment of NASS; how many investigations have been undertaken in each year; what the outcomes were; and if he will make a statement. [102778]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 13 March 2003]: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has entered into contracts with both the private and public sector to provide accommodation for asylum seekers. Under the terms of the contract a set price is paid for the accommodation provided but contractors are required to meet key performance indicators. There have been no investigations into suspected cases of fraud or overpayment.

The method of payment used by NASS to pay its contractors may, on occasions, result in a technical overpayment. This is caused by the need to make deductions from the contract price where there has been a failure to meet key performance indicators but the system is self correcting in subsequent months.

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by his Department; what their scope was; when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102052]

Beverley Hughes:

The Queen's Golden Jubilee Award

From November 2002, the Home Department has been responsible for The Queen's Golden Jubilee Award (for voluntary service by groups in the community). This new, annual Award, which was launched in April 2002, is for outstanding voluntary groups of two or more people who have been operating in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man, normally for a period of three years or more. Winning groups and the individuals who nominated them for consideration will be informed in confidence shortly before the public announcement on 2 June 2003.

The Philip Lawrence Awards

The Philip Lawrence Awards were established in 1996. They celebrate annually outstanding citizenship in their communities by young people. They are awarded in November or December of each year.

Home Office Police Research Award Scheme

The Home Office Police Research Awards have been granted every year since 1987. The Awards provide Home Office funding and support for police staff to carry out research and/or development projects. All individuals submitting an application are provided with feedback. Those who are successful undergo an induction training event whilst those who are unsuccessful are given suggestions, if and when appropriate, on how to improve their proposals for a future application.

Host police force areas are notified together with the candidates.

The Ferrers Trophy

The Ferrers Trophy is awarded annually to the 'National Special of the Year'. There are also awards for Highly Commended and Team entries. They are open to all special constables and teams of special constables in England and Wales. The awards ceremony is held in June of each year.

The Tilley Award

The Tilley Award is open to all United Kingdom police forces for excellence in problem oriented policing. It was established in 1999. Winners and runners up are notified of the results in July with a formal announcement in September of each year.

The Prison Service has several award schemes for staff and prisoners. For staff they are as follows:

Butler Trust—Greening award

A new award for staff who have contributed towards improving the Prison Service's environmental performance was announced in August 2002 and the first winners will be presented with their awards in late March.

Staff Ideas Themed Competition "Making Prisons Greener"

In September 2001, the Prison Service launched its second central staff ideas themed competition "Making Prisons Greener". All the ideas have been featured in more detail in the Greening Operations Team's quarterly newsletter and in its annual environmental report published in July 2002.

Design a poster competition

The Prison Service, as part of its campaign to promote awareness of environmental matters among staff, launched a design a poster competition in 2001. This was aimed at staff and their families who were asked to submit designs for greening and energy efficiency posters to be used across the Service. The winning designs were used to produce posters that have been distributed to every prison and Service Headquarters.

The Elton Trophy Competition

The Elton Trophy Competition is an annual award scheme rewarding highly creditable performance in prison workshops. Eligibility for nomination was restricted to industrial workshops until 2002 when the scope was expanded to allow nominations from craft, charity and vocational training workshops.

Commendation awards are also made to individual members of staff directly linked to workshops who have contributed significantly to a workshop's success.

The Prison Service introduced performance arrangements in April 2001. These provide practical guidance on approaches to recognising individual performance outside the staff appraisal system. The arrangements encourage managers to recognise and acknowledge good performance by their staff. The methods suggested vary from a simple "thank you", to the award of vouchers to one-off financial rewards. There are a number of strands to the arrangements and consist of the following:

Prison Officer of the Year Award

This is an annual event introduced in 2002 as a method of "recognising, rewarding and celebrating the outstanding achievements of prison officers throughout the Service".

Butler Trust Award

The Trust was established as a registered charity in 1985 to promote and encourage positive prison regimes. An independent annual award scheme was set up to recognise exceptionally dedicated and often creative work undertaken by any person working in the Prison Service. The Service's performance recognition arrangements encourage nominations for the award.

Staff Ideas Scheme

Staff are encouraged to contribute to the Ideas Scheme which has been extant for a number of years. The scheme exists on two tiers. Firstly, there is local consideration of ideas specific to the local working environment. Secondly, there is national consideration of service-wide ideas that would have implications for policy or regular working practice. The objective of the scheme is to improve policy developments and make practices and procedures more effective and cost-efficient. Ideas are recognised with monetary awards from £25 up to £3,000, or with a small encouragement gift such as a pen.

Prisoner award schemes for prisoners consist of the following:

Bricklaying Competition

The Prisoners' Learning and Skills Unit (PLSU) based in the Department for Education and Skills contributes towards annual bricklaying competitions for prisoners. These competitions, which are recognised by UK Skills, are administered using National Skills Competition guidelines and judged independently by the Guild of Bricklayers. The winning team from the Scottish Prison Service Competition is invited to compete in the final for prisons in England and Wales.

Koestler Award Trust

PLSU also supports the Koestler Award Trust, which runs an annual competition in a wide range of creative arts for those in prisons, young offender institutions, high security psychiatric hospitals and secure units. 64 judges, working for free, send critical comments to the entrants which encourages communication between the artist, the Trust and the Education Co-ordinator and tutors in establishments. The work is judged in May and June and certificates sent to the award-winners in July. Award cheques are sent to Governors to be credited to the prisoner's private cash.

Koestler's annual exhibition of award-winning work is held in September.

Windlesham Trophy

The Windlesham Trophy is awarded every year to the prison judged to have the best kept gardens. The scheme includes individual commendation awards. These recognise exceptional talent, or an outstanding contribution to a garden's success, or input into prisoner training or rehabilitation. The competition is open to all prison establishments in England and Wales. The results are published throughout the Prison Service in the first week of August each year. The Royal Horticultural Society provides a panel of three experts to judge the final round. There is press interest local to the winning establishment, and occasional interest from national and specialist gardening press.

Cap Le Hague Nuclear Reactor

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place for the protection of the Isle of Wight in the event of an attack on the Cap Le Hague nuclear reactor in France. [102839]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

In the event of any overseas nuclear incident (arising from an accident or a deliberate act) the Government's National Response Plan for Overseas Nuclear Accidents and RIMNET would be activated. A copy of this plan is available in the Library.

The UK Government would expect to receive notification of such an incident via the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), European Commission Urgent Radiological Information Exchange (ECURIE), bilateral agreements between Governments for exchange of information (France, Denmark, Holland, Norway and Russia are signatories) or an alert from one or more of the 93 gamma dose rate monitoring sites that comprise the UK's national radiation monitoring network (RIMNET).

An assessment of the likely impact of any release of radioactivity on the UK would be made immediately using all available information together with dispersion prediction modelling provided by the Meteorological Office. Using global weather information the current and forecast meteorological scenario would provide early estimates of the trajectory and the time of impact in the UK. This information when combined with environmental monitoring will allow the Government to assess projected levels of contamination and likely coverage.

A Technical Co-ordination Centre would be set up in the purpose-built Defra emergency room in London, from where a team of officials experienced in dealing with emergencies would co-ordinate the response to the incident. Public information and advice based on this information would be prepared and distributed from the Technical Co-ordination Centre to all the authorities and organisations with responsibilities for protecting the public and the environment including those on the Isle of Wight if the island was likely to be affected.

Terrorism

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what emergency planning has been undertaken in preparation for a chemical or biological attack in the UK; and if he will make a statement about the state of preparedness of the (a) emergency services and (b) local authority services. [102518]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer the hon. Member to the Written Statement on Terrorism (Civil Contingency Planning) that I made on 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 72WS.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evaluation has been made of the impact of the detonation of a dirty radiological bomb in a city centre; what assessment has been made of the ways in which decontamination needed can be carried out; and what calculation has been made of the likely consequential costs of such a dirty bomb being used. [101994]

Mr. Blunkett: The United Kingdom has well tried and tested contingency plans—developed over many years—for responding to a wide range of terrorist threats, including those which might involve the threatened or actual use of radiological materials.

At a national level, existing contingency plans for dealing with the aftermath of radiological emergencies arising from nuclear and other incidents have been reviewed and adapted to cater for the deliberate release of radioactivity, or 'dirty bombs' into the environment. The Department for Environment Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) takes the lead in maintaining these plans.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (John Denham), published the Strategic National Guidance for the Decontamination of People Exposed To Chemical, Biological, Radiological or Nuclear (CBRN) Substances or Material on 3 February 2003 which contains ways in which the decontamination of people is carried out. This is an approach which provides simple but effective decontamination for chemical, biological or radiological contaminants.

The consequential costs of such an incident would of course depend on a number of factors, including the size of the device, the weather conditions and the area affected.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are in place to prevent illegal immigrants being used by terrorists to introduce dangerous pathogens into the UK. [102301]

Beverley Hughes: Clandestine illegal entrants detected in Kent are transferred to the Dover Asylum Screening Centre and they and their baggage are searched thoroughly as part of the screening process.

Clandestine illegal entrants detected elsewhere in the country, are normally taken to the nearest police station where they would be searched before being taken into the custody area.

The terrorist threat remains real, and serious. As recent events have shown, no country is immune from attack, and it simply is not possible to guarantee against more attacks in the future. However, this Government are resolute in their determination to defeat terrorism regardless of its source.

The average time between application and initial decision was six months for initial decisions made in 2002. This has been calculated using all cases for which data are available, including older cases decided as part of the reduction of the backlog, as well as new cases. This compares to 20 months in 1997.

Applications for British citizenship are dealt with upon receipt and are not subdivided into straightforward and non-straightforward applications.

The most recently published data on average processing times for British citizenship relate to applications lodged prior to 31 March 2001, when the average waiting time was 11.6 months.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the pathogens which could be used in a terrorist attack against which there is vaccine available. [102302]

Mr. Blunkett: Our defence against bioterrorism takes account of the possibility of terrorists seeking to use a wide range of pathogens and toxins. Schedule 5 to the Anti-Terrorism Crime and Security Act 2001 lists 47 such agents for which security arrangements must be made.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the detection technologies available to each of the emergency services for use in incidents where terrorist threat surveillance may be appropriate. [102303]

Mr. Blunkett: The Fire Service has access to radiological survey meters and, in appropriate circumstances, personal radiation dosimeters. In addition, all brigades have access to explosive atmosphere monitors and local scientific advice.

The Police Service has access to chemical monitors and radiation dosimeters. They also have access to specialist national chemical, biological and radiological advice.

The Ambulance Service use the detection technologies of Police and Fire Services. It would not be appropriate, on security grounds, to give more specific information.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to protect the parliamentary estate against potential terrorist attacks. [102455]

Mr. Blunkett: Operational responsibility for security within the parliamentary estate rests with the Serjeant-at-Arms. Outside the estate's boundaries, operational responsibility falls to the Metropolitan Police Service. For security reasons, I cannot comment on the detail of the measures in place to protect against potential terrorist or other forms of attack.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the level of preparedness amongst voluntary organisations of the United Kingdom to respond to a major terrorist attack; and if he will make a statement. [96250]

Mr. Blunkett: The degree of preparedness of any voluntary organisation judged competent to work with the statutory agencies in handling the consequences of any civil emergency is a matter for assessment by the local authority and/or emergency service through which the voluntary organisation is registered and operates. The Government have published clear guidance on the use and training of volunteers and voluntary organisations in the following core guidance publications: 'Dealing With Disaster' (3rd edition), England and Wales (chapter 6); 'Dealing With Disaster Together', Scottish Executive (chapter 7); 'A Guide to Emergency Planning in Northern Ireland' (annex C).

Contingent Liabilities

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which contingent liabilities for which his Department has responsibility have matured in each of the last five financial years; and if he will make a statement. [101767]

Mr. Blunkett: My Department carries out an exercise each year to identify the contingent and actual liabilities of the Home Department and reports the findings to Her Majesty's Treasury.

Information relating to 1997–98 is not readily available.

Between 1998–99 and 2001–02, payments were made against only one contingent liability. This arose from section 27 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. It related to the cost of re-funding charges for travel documents issued between January 1994 and February 1999. By the end of the year 2001–02, the liability had reduced to below the £100,000 reporting threshold.

Correspondence

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Immigration and Nationality Directorate will reply to letters from the hon. Member for Vauxhall dated 25 March 2002, 19 June 2002, 21 October 2002 and 16 December 2002 about a constituent, reference number M61644. [101833]

Beverley Hughes: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 17 March 2003.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 3 January from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. B. Padya. [103746]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 14 March 2003.

Court Judgment (Howard League)

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings have been held between Home Office and Department of Health officials following the judgment in R (Howard League for Penal Reform) v Secretary of State for the Home Department. [103157]

Hilary Benn: Following the High Court judgement, Prison Service Officials have had a series of three meetings so far with Department of Health and Youth Justice Board officials to consider the implications of Justice Munby's judgement. The meetings are looking at the possible need for further guidance.

Criminal Justice Bill

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of children and young people who will be sentenced annually under each of the new proposals in the Criminal Justice Bill to (a) detention for life, (b) detention for public protection and (c) extended sentences. [103077]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Justice Bill provides new mandatory sentences for offenders who commit a specified violent or sexual offence and who, in the opinion of the court, present a serious risk to members of the public of serious harm commissioned by the offender of further specified offences.

Relevant juveniles convicted of an offence which carries a maximum penalty of detention for life under section 91 of the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000, will receive detention for life under section 91.

Those convicted of a serious specified offence which does not fall within this category, will receive either a sentence of detention for public protection or an extended sentence.

Those convicted of a specified offence which is not a serious offence, will be given an extended sentence.

The provisions aim to protect the public from the very small minority of juveniles who present a serious risk and to enable those offenders to be detained until their risk has been reduced. We anticipate their being used infrequently. We estimate that under them around 30 juveniles a year are likely to receive detention for life, around 10 the extended sentence and one or two detention for public protection.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his statement of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, under what circumstances individuals' fingerprints will be retained by the CRB; how long after they are taken will they be destroyed; and if he will make a statement. [101018]

Hilary Benn: There are already arrangements in place for fingerprints to be used in circumstances where the applicant's identity cannot be confirmed by any other means. Under the Police Act 1997 (Criminal Records) Regulations 2002, fingerprints, and any copies, taken for this purpose must be destroyed as soon as is practicable after the identity of the applicant is established to the satisfaction of the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB). Any applicant who asks to be allowed to witness the destruction of his fingerprints or copies of them has the right to do so.

As we have made clear, we shall undertake a further study, in consultation with interested parties, on the recommendation that fingerprints be taken to confirm the identity of applicants for particularly sensitive positions. If, in the light of this consultation, it is decided to proceed, the detailed arrangements for the retention and destruction of applicants' fingerprints will be drawn up.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalties will be applied if registered bodies fail to correctly identify individuals applying for disclosure by the Criminal Records Bureau; and if he will make a statement. [102524]

Hilary Benn: Under the Code of Practice, Registered Bodies are under an obligation to follow all Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) published guidance. This includes literature ensuring that false or fraudulent applications are not submitted. If a Registered Body fails to comply with the Code of Practice, the Secretary of State has the option to refuse to issue it with further Criminal Record Certificates. It is a criminal offence to knowingly make a false statement for the purpose of enabling another person to obtain a Criminal Record Certificate.

As part of the Independent Review Team's recommendations, the critical role of Registered Bodies in the CRB process is to be upgraded. To ensure that Registered Bodies discharge their responsibilities effectively, we will take powers to attach conditions to a registration and to revoke a registration where such conditions are breached.

Experience Corps

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is the purpose of the Experience Corps to recruit volunteers new to significant involvement with voluntary organisations; and what monitoring procedures are in place to assess whether recruits represent an additional resource for the voluntary sector. [101866]

Beverley Hughes: The establishment of The Experience Corps was informed by an Experts Group drawn together to advise on a blue print for a National Experience Corps following agreement from the Ad Hoc ministerial group. In developing their plans the Experts Group were informed by Ministers that:

The scheme should not exclude existing volunteers in the target age group and must avoid double counting.

The Experience Corps monitor all information on existing volunteers through their database and state that they aim to 'increase, widen and sustain their volunteering contribution'. The performance of the Experience Corps is currently being reviewed by the Home Office.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many employers in the UK were found to have employed illegal immigrants in the last year for which figures are available; how many have been successfully prosecuted; and if he will make a statement. [102526]

Hilary Benn: Information on the number of employers in the United Kingdom who are found to have employed illegal immigrants is not collected centrally and therefore not available.

Information on persons proceeded against for employing a person subject to immigration control is contained in the attached table and published annually in the Command publication "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom", which is available in the Library and from the Home Office website: www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

We recognised in our White Paper "Secure Borders, Safe Haven" that section 8 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1996 had not proved to be an effective deterrent in the prevention of illegal migrant working. We also outlined in our White Paper a new and comprehensive strategy for tackling the damaging consequences of illegal working which addressed the root of the problem. Work is on-going in three areas: strengthening present enforcement arrangements; facilitating effective joint working across Government; and working with business and trade unions to improve compliance.

In November 2002, I established an Illegal Working Steering Group, which includes representatives from a range of business sectors, the Trades Union's Congress and Commission for Racial Equality. The group has the potential to become a key player in the prevention of illegal working, by ensuring that there is greater awareness of the problems that this form of illegality creates. The group will also be involved in ensuring that the guidance for complying with the amended legislation will be clear, concise and practical.

[2] Provisional

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's budget for (a) staff and (b) IT in (i) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02; and what the planned budget [illegible] for (A) 2002–03 and (B) 2003–04. [102454]

Beverley Hughes: The Staff Pay budget is set out as follows:

£ million

2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
227	267	343

The associated IT budget cannot be easily separated from other administrative costs.

The budget for 2003–04 will be published in the Home Office's main estimates (in the usual way).

Nurses (International Recruitment)

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average length of visa granted by Work Permits UK to overseas nurses seeking employment in the UK was in each of the last three years for which figures are available; whether it is possible for such a visa to be extended at the request of the applicant; and how many overseas nurses, having successfully been granted a working visa for the UK, have sought to extend this visa in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [103075]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Figures for the average length of work permits granted to overseas nurses in each of the last three calendar years are unavailable due to the nature of the information recorded on the Work Permits (UK) Management Information system.

A work permit for an overseas nurse can be extended at the request of the UK-based employer that originally recruited the nurse.

The figures for the number of overseas nurses who have received an extension on their original work permit in each of the last three calendar years are given as follows:

2002: 6,228

2000: 1,529

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications Work Permits UK received from overseas nurses wishing to work in the UK in each of the last five years, broken down by nationality. [103076]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Applications for work permits are made by UK-based employers on behalf of overseas nationals.

The figures for the number of applications received from UK-based employers to recruit overseas nurses in each of the last five calendar years, broken down by the top 10 nationalities are given in the following tables:

Prison Healthcare

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost was of providing healthcare in each (a) publicly and (b) privately administered prison in each of the last four years; and what the per prison costs were in each prison. [102667]

Hilary Benn: Information is not available in the form requested, as costs of health care have not been identified separately in the past. A report by the Joint Prison Service and National Health Service Executive Working Group "The Future Organisation of Prison Health Care" in 1999, estimated that that Prison Service establishments spent about £85 million on prisoners' health care in 1997–98. A questionnaire completed by establishments in 2002–03 estimated that the cost of healthcare in English prison establishments in 2002–03 was about £113 million, although these two figures are not directly comparable. The following is a breakdown of questionnaire returns by prison establishment. For private prisons, payments are made for the contracted service and the health care element is not separately identified.

Prisoners (Drug Treatment)

Mr. Nick Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of criminal offenders required immediate detoxification on entering prison in each year since 1995. [98503]

Hilary Benn: This information is not available in the form requested. Prison Service establishments have reported that between 1 April 2001 and 31 March 2002 41,916 drug and alcohol detoxifications have been carried out.

Private Sector Businesses (Forms)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the forms that his Department requires private sector businesses to complete and return. [98087]

Mr. Wills: Those forms which private sector organisations are required to complete and return are listed. Forms are completed and returned as and when necessary, and therefore on an occasional basis, unless a specific frequency is mentioned.

Forms concerned with the licensing of the production, trade or export of controlled drugs and associated substances.

The following forms are required to be completed by private sector businesses:

Category 1 Precursor chemicals licence application to trade within the EU.

Category 1 Precursor chemicals licence application to export outside the EU

Category 2 Precursor chemicals registration application for trading within the EU

Category 2 Precursor chemicals registration application to export outside the EU

Category 3 Precursor chemicals registration application to export outside the EU

Application for Individual Export Authorisation to export precursor chemicals outside the EU

Application for a Licence/Authority under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971

Application to renew a Licence/Authority under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971

Remittance form to accompany payment for licences issued under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971

Application for Import Licence and corresponding import certificate under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971

Application for Export Licence

Annual statistical return form for precursor chemicals

Annual statistical return form for controlled psychotropics

Annual statistical return form for controlled narcotics.

Forms related to employment, either with the Home Office or in other places.

Forms sent to private sector firms (in their capacity as previous employers) for completion for purposes of:

obtaining references on staff applying for employment with the Home Office obtaining security clearance, in the case of successful applicants

In the case of an organisation (private sector or otherwise) working with children or vulnerable adults there are three forms used by the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB):

Registration form to be completed and sent to (CRB) for purpose of registering the organisation. This form will include the nomination of a principal countersignatory (person within, the firm authorised to ask for disclosure of records pertaining to an prospective employee)

Application form in respect of any additional countersignatories the firm might require.

Prospective employees must complete and return (with countersignature) a form authorising CRB to release relevant information about him or her.

Purchase order forms contain an attachment, which the Home Office asks the supplier to complete and return as acceptance of our terms and conditions.

Annual statistical return from commercial firms who have licences to perform scientific procedures on animals.

Monthly return form for collecting information on "tagged" offenders from contractors who supply and service electronic monitoring devices.

Report form (shortly to be introduced) for private sector firms within the regulated financial sector to file with National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) if they suspect a transaction has involved criminal proceeds.

Probation Service

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how well equipped the National Probation Agency is to provide a drug-rehabilitation service to offenders on leaving prison, with specific reference to those offenders whose sentence length prevents them from attending drug rehabilitation courses while in prison; how much money has been allocated to provide this service; and if he will make a statement. [102446]

Hilary Benn: When an offender with drugs problems leaves prison into supervision by the National Probation Service, the service will arrange with partner agencies for drugs rehabilitation treatment to be provided as part of a supervision plan. For offenders serving short sentences in prison, Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare (CARAT) services represent the main drug intervention and can include initial throughcare links into the community for up to eight weeks. The Government have made available £1 billion this year, rising to £1.483 billion by 2005–06, to meet the commitments to provide drug treatment and to tackle drug related offending outlined in the Updated Drugs Strategy.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the introduction of OASIS by probation services. [101174]

Hilary Benn: The National Probation Service is making good progress with the implementation of the Offenders Assessment System (OASys). By the beginning of April 2003 every probation area will either have completed implementation or be in the process of implementation.

Public Services

Angela Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce co-payments for the public services for which he is responsible. [102199]

Mr. Blunkett: The Home Department aims to meet its public service responsibilities in the most cost effective and efficient manner. To achieve this, consideration is given to Private Finance Initiatives (PFI), and Public Private Partnerships (PPP) to minimise financial risk and maximise benefit to the Public. The Home Department currently has a number of PFI Schemes in operation providing new Police Headquarters, Police Air Support Services, and Police Communications, and is negotiating a number of similar funding partnerships for public services in both the Police Service and the National Probation Service.

Sex Offenders

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in trialing the vicious and sex offenders register. [100834]

Hilary Benn: The Violent and Sex Offenders Register (ViSOR) will enable the Police and Probations services to register offenders and maintain a national, up-to-date, shared store of information on offenders, their risk assessments and, critically, their movements.

The register will be piloted at two sites in November 2003. Subject to their successful completion, national implementation will start in January 2004.

In the meantime, forces have had the capability since August 2002 to search a database for information on offenders within their force area. This will help forces to track offenders, rationalise their business processes and ease the implementation of the full national solution, particularly in putting past records onto the new database.

UK Passport

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason UK passports specify identification details in French in addition to English; and whether he plans to replace French with an alternative language. [102737]

Beverley Hughes: The British Passport includes French on the personal details page to facilitate international travel and to comply with International Civil Aviational Organisation standards and European Union resolutions. All passports of European Union countries include English and French on the personal details page in addition to their own language. We have no plans to seek to change this.

Women Prisoners (Babies)

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies (a) under nine months and (b) under 18 months are in British prisons. [102884]

Hilary Benn: On 10 March 2003 there were 31 babies under nine months and 19 babies under 18 months in prisons in England and Wales. Information about prisons in Scotland and Northern Ireland should be sought from the Scottish Executive and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Young Offender Institutions

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Young Offender Institutions operate a personal officer scheme. [103159]

Hilary Benn: All Young Offender Institutions operate a personal officer scheme.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child protection procedures are in place in young offender institutions for juveniles considered to be at risk. [103166]

Hilary Benn: In line with Prison Service Order 4950, each young offender institution has a child protection policy. The policy is based upon well-established inter-agency arrangements for promoting the welfare of young people and safeguarding them from harm. Establishments are instructed to appoint a Child Protection Coordinator and establish a Child Protection Committee. Local Child Protection arrangements are approved by the Area Child Protection Committee and complement existing procedures for safeguarding young people such as the anti-bullying strategy and the pastoral care arrangements.

Youth Justice

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 17 year olds have been (a) questioned, (b) arrested and (c) charged in the past 12 months. [101728]

Hilary Benn: The available information relates to 17 year olds proceeded against, and of those, the number who were brought to court following arrest, and those given reprimands or final warnings. 54,590 were proceeded against in England and Wales in 2001, of whom 40,057 had been arrested and charged. In addition, 15,203 were given reprimands or final warnings.

Information on persons questioned is not collected centrally, and the information collected on total arrests is limited to those arrested for notifiable offences and then only by age group rather than individual age.

Statistics on persons proceeded against and cautioned in 2002 will be published in the autumn.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Administrative Costs

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the administrative costs were of the (a) New Deal 50 Plus training grant, (b) job grant, (c) funeral payments grant, (d) Sure Start maternity grant, (e) community care grants and (f) access to work grants in the last financial year. [101648]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 29 January 2003, Official Report, column 945W.

Child Care

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of lone parents (a) are unable to work due to child care commitments and (b) have had to give up work because of a lack of available child care in the last six months. [101048]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The extent to which childcare commitments contribute directly to ability to work is a complex issue. Lone parents who work, as well as those who do not, report child care as a barrier to work. In a recent survey 52 per cent. of non-working lone parents reported a lack of child care in their area, compared to 45 per cent. of working lone parents; and 53 per cent. of non-working lone parents did not want to leave their child with anyone else, compared to 44 per cent. of working lone parents.

Information on the percentage of lone parents who have to give up work due to lack of available child care is not available. The most common reasons given for giving up work are health (27 per cent.), a personal decision to leave (15 per cent.) and being made redundant (12 per cent.). 6 per cent. of lone parents gave the breakdown of their child care arrangements as the reason for leaving work, but this does not mean necessarily that there was no child care available.

The New Deal for Lone Parents (NDLP) is providing specialist advice and support, including help with child care, to help lone parents make the move into work. Recent evaluation has shown that participation in NDLP more than doubles lone parents chances of moving into work. We are making work possible for lone parents by providing available affordable childcare through initiatives such as the National Childcare Strategy and our new Tax Credits are making sure that that work pays.

Correspondence

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the hon. Member for Broxbourne will receive a reply to her letters of 18 December 2002, 16 January, 14 February and 13 March relating to the adoption of the approved code of practice on passive smoking at work. [103688]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Ethnic Minority Unemployment

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what organisations have been awarded the contract announced by the Department of Work and Pensions in July 2002 to narrow the 17 per cent. gap between the overall employment rate and that of ethnic minority people; and what timescale has been set for delivering the contracts. [98017]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Minority Ethnic Outreach initiative is part of our strategy to tackle the gap between the overall employment rate and the minority ethnic employment rate. Introduced in April 2002, the initiative aims to strengthen the support available to minority ethnic jobless people within five areas of the country with large minority ethnic populations. 45 organisations (through a total of 51 contracts) are contracted to deliver the service until the end of March 2004. The organisations are as follows:

External Consultancy

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92254]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

The total cost to DWP of the use of external consultants and professional services in the 2001–02 financial year was £169.494 million.

Details of DWP external spend are recorded centrally for client group and corporate centre expenditure, and not by agency. Figures for the former DSS are available by agency, as follows.

Housing Benefit Fraud

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will publish targets for the reduction of housing benefit fraud. [102915]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government have set a challenging target to reduce fraud and error in housing benefit for working age people. We are working with local authorities to achieve a 25 per cent. reduction by March 2006.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what action he is taking to review (a) the starting point and (b) the tapered relief for set-off of occupational pension income against incapacity benefit; [101722]

(2) how many individuals who would otherwise qualify for incapacity benefit are affected by (a) whole and (b) partial withdrawal of benefit owing to their receipt of an occupational pension; and what the total annual benefit foregone from this clawback was in each of the last three years. [101723]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Incapacity benefit (IB) is intended to provide a measure of income replacement for sick and disabled people of working age. We believe it is therefore right to take some account of their occupational or personal pensions as they provide income replacements.

If a person claiming IB receives an occupational pension, personal pension or payments through a permanent health insurance scheme of £85 per week or more, their IB is reduced by half the amount which exceeds £85. These rules came into force for new claims after April 2001.

While we have no plans at present to change the threshold at which income from an occupational and personal pension is taken into account in assessing IB, we keep all social security rules under review.

We estimate that the reduction in expenditure on IB due to the rules on offsetting personal and occupational pensions was £10 million in the year to March 2002.

Note:

The estimate is rounded to the nearest £10 million and excludes the impact of offsetting reductions in the income-related benefits.

The available information is in the table.

Innovation Fund

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) when the review of the Innovation Fund is expected to be completed and published; [98018]

(2) what organisations have received monies from the Innovation Fund; for what purposes they have received funding; and how much funding they have received. [98019]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The New Deal Innovation Fund was launched in 1999 to test innovative ideas for enhancing the New Deals and the way we help people move from benefit into sustained jobs. In 2001 we introduced the Lone Parent Innovation Fund to test new ways of helping people on the New Deal for Lone Parents find and remain in work. These two funds were merged last year.

The Innovation Funds have supported 92 projects so far and a further 16 are in development. Information on the funding received by individual organisations is commercial in confidence and cannot be published. There have been four rounds of projects under the New Deal Innovation Fund, and two under the Lone Parents Fund. Total expenditure on the first two rounds of the New Deal Innovation Fund and round one of the Lone Parent Fund was £1.78 million. Expenditure figures for rounds three and four of the New Deal Fund and round two of the Loan Parent Fund are not available as the projects are ongoing or in their development phase.

We have also allocated £1.4 million (for 2002–03) from the Innovation Fund to support the Ambition initiative which aims to help unemployed and disadvantaged people gain the right skills to meet the needs of employers in key sectors. Funds are also being used to co-sponsor the Centre for Economic and Social Inclusion's (CESI) website, to facilitate the spread of innovation and good practice. Information on the funding received by CESI is commercial in confidence. In addition, innovation funding has been made available to Jobcentre Plus Districts to deliver a series of Innovation Laboratories' to stimulate innovation and creativity at a local level. One event has already been delivered at a cost of £45,000 and two more are planned for late March.

Information on the organisations receiving support under each round of the Funds, the focus of each round and expenditure on each round, has been placed in the Library.

The review of the Innovation Fund is scheduled for completion in May 2003. The results will then be published on the CESI website.

New Deal

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many businesses were established under the new deal self-employment model for 50 plus in each year since its creation; and how many of those businesses were still trading after (a) one year, (b) two years, (c) three years, (d) four years and (e) five years and above. [93410]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The New Deal 50 Plus does not include specific assistance for people going into self-employment. However, through the New Deal 50 plus, the Employment Credit of £60 per week for up to a year is available to eligible customers whose estimated income is £15,000 or less, this includes people going in to self-employment. From the 6 April 2003, the Employment Credit will be replaced by an over 50s supplement to the Working Tax Credit.

In addition, people going into self employment through New Deal 50 plus have access to a Training Grant, of up to £1,500, in the first two years of trading.

Information on the number of people who have received the Employment Credit for self-employment is in the table.

New Deal 50 Plus

	April to December 2000	January to December 2001	January to November 2002	Total
Employment Credit—Self Employment	2,960	4,250	3,750	10,960
Training Grant—Self Employment	270	750	750	1,780

Figures are rounded to the nearest 10 and may not sum due to rounding.

New Deal Evaluation Database

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many young people in the City of York council area have been helped into jobs under the New Deal. [102635]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: From its launch in January 1998 to the end of December 2002 the New Deal had helped over 400,000 young people into work, including 820 people in the City of York Local Authority area.

Pensioners (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners there are in (a) Essex and (b) the West Chelmsford constituency. [103123]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Burns, dated 18 March 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the number of pensioners living in Essex and the West Chelmsford constituency.

The Office for National Statistics does not produce mid-year population estimates on parliamentary constituency boundaries. Results from the 2001 Census have not yet been published at this geographic level.

The lowest geography mid-year population estimates are published at is local authority area. In view of this, the population of pensionable age (60 and over for females, 65 and over for males) in mid-2001 for Chelmsford borough council area was 26,900. The population of persons of pensionable age in Essex was 253,800 in mid-2001.

Statutory Money Purchase Illustration Regulations

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will extend the scope of the Statutory Money Purchase Illustration Regulations that come into force on 6 April to include pensions sold to the public after that date. [103544]

Mr. McCartney: The regulations apply equally to any member of a money purchase pension scheme, regardless of when they became a member of the scheme. This includes anyone who joins such a scheme after the regulations come into force on 6 April.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the UK Government is in regular contact with the Iraqi opposition group known as SCIRI and the militia forces under its control. [103734]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials are in regular contact with Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq (SCIRI), both in London and Tehran. SCIRI have also met FCO ministers as part of an Iraqi opposition delegation. We have no contact with the militia forces attached to SCIRI.

Goa (Portuguese Passports)

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had discussions with the Indian Government on applications to the Portuguese consulate in Goa for Portuguese passports from Indian residents, and the use of such passports subsequently to facilitate entry to the UK; and if he will make a statement. [102515]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have had no discussions with the Government of India on this issue. We have discussed the matter with the Portuguese Consulate in Goa. We understand that some residents of the former Portuguese enclaves in India (Goa, Daman and Diu) are eligible to apply for a Portuguese passport. Holders of Portuguese passports are entitled to enter the UK freely as citizens of an EU member state.

Bahrain

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Lord Avebury's recent visit to Bahrain, with particular reference to (a) his plea to King Hamed bin Isa Al Khalifa to pardon Richard Mechan, a British citizen and (b) the evidence of judicial irregularities presented to the King. [101203]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 10 January 2003 Lord Avebury wrote to my noble Friend Baroness Amos, informing her of his recent visit to Bahrain and his meeting with the Ruler, King Hamed. Lord Avebury handed the King a dossier compiled by Terry Mechan, about the case of his son, Richard Mechan, imprisoned for manslaughter. Lord Avebury has told us that the King agreed to review the case. In a further letter to Baroness Amos on 7 March, Lord Avebury asked if our Embassy in Bahrain could make inquiries with the King's Private Office as to what progress had been made. Our Embassy has been pursing this matter.

Bangladesh

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of human rights in Bangladesh; and if he will make a statement. [103236]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our High Commission in Dhaka monitors closely the regrettably frequent reports of human rights abuses in Bangladesh. We were concerned by reports of mistreatment of detainees, including deaths following detention, associated with the recent law and order drive, "Operation Clean Heart", and urged the Bangladesh Government to follow the due process of law in all cases. We regularly take up human rights issues with the Bangladesh Government, calling for all allegations of human rights abuses to be fully investigated and for perpetrators to be brought to justice.

Burma

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ban new investment by UK companies in Burma. [103312]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As I made clear in the House of Commons on 10 December 2002, Official Report, column 154, the UK does not encourage trade or investment in Burma. Companies wishing to trade or invest in Burma receive no assistance at all from the UK Government. Companies inquiring about trade or investment are told of our policy and advised of the appalling human rights situation and the economic incompetence and corruption of the Burmese regime. A combination of international opinion and the regime's economic incompetence means that there is hardly any new investment in Burma and that established companies, such as Premier Oil, have pulled out.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed by the Burmese military against the Karen, Karenni and Shan civilians in Burma. [103314]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We receive numerous reports of very serious cases of human rights abuse in Burma. However, war crimes and crimes against humanity are carefully defined under law and these are not phrases that have been used by the UN Special Rapporteur for Human Rights in Burma to describe the situation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about human rights abuses by the Government of Burma of the Karen, Karenni and Shan peoples. [103315]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We receive a regular flow of credible reports from non-governmental organisations and the United Nations—including the UN Special Rapporteur for Human Rights—that re-affirm our grave concern over the human rights situation in Burma, including abuses directed at the Shan, Karen and Karenni. The reports confirm that very little progress has been made by the Burmese regime to improve its human rights record.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he and his European Union partners have made to the Government of Burma about that government's treatment of the Karen, Karenni and Shan people. [103319]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A core aspect of UK and EU policy is action to press for an end to human rights abuses. Burmese ethnic minority groups, including the Shan, Karen and Karenni suffer the effects of this abuse disproportionately. The EU co-sponsored a resolution at the United Nations General Assembly in November 2002 that condemned the regime's human rights record. We are currently preparing a further resolution for presentation at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in April. This is in addition to regular EU statements and demarches to the Burmese regime about the situation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to help broker a ceasefire between the Burmese military government and Karen, Karenni and Shan resistance groups. [103321]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been encouraged by reports that some of the insurgent groups fighting the Burmese regime are prepared to consider negotiating a ceasefire. The EU has called for the peaceful end to the conflicts in Burma in resolutions at the United Nations General Assembly. We strongly support the idea in principle and stand ready to help assist the process in the most effective way.

Family Visitor Visas

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the reasons are for the change in the overall rate of refusal of family visitor visa applications; and what the reasons are for the changes in rates of refusal of family visitor visa applications made at entry clearance posts (a) in the Middle East, (b) in South Asia, (c) in Western Europe and (d) in Central Europe since 1 August 2002. [103143]

Mr. Rammell: The number of refusals in Islamabad has increased with the resumption of interviews of family visit applicants on 2 December 2002. Previously these applications were being decided on the papers alone: many applications that would normally have resulted in an interview were therefore returned to the applicants unresolved.

These figures do not show any undue deviation from what would normally be expected for Islamabad. The very low pre-November 2002 figures were rather unusual, reflecting the limited service then being offered.

Otherwise, the figures set out in the tables, which have been placed in the Library, show no significant increase in the refusal rate of family visit applications since August. The variations in the rate of refusal seen are not unusual. Each application is decided on the balance of probabilities and their individual merits in accordance with the Immigration Rules.

Iran

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from interest groups in Britain regarding the abuse of human rights in Iran; and what discussions he has had with the Iranian authorities on the matter. [103350]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary regularly receives a wide range of representations about the human rights situation in Iran. My right hon. Friend and I make a point of raising human rights whenever we see our Iranian counterparts including at the recent meeting between my right hon. Friend and the Iranian Foreign Minister on 6 February.

Iraq

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to ensure that resolution 57/232 of the United Nations General Assembly on human rights in Iraq is fully implemented. [103322]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is not possible to work with the current Iraqi regime to ensure that resolutions such as this one are fully implemented. As and when this situation changes we will work with the international community to ensure that the human rights situation in Iraq is properly addressed.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 6 March 2003, Official Report, column 1191W, on UN Resolution 57/232, whether the UK Government is supporting the deployment of human rights monitors throughout Iraq. [103377]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: UN Resolution 57/232 calls for the deployment of human rights monitors throughout Iraq. As a co-sponsor of this resolution, the UK supports this.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Iran about the possibility of a war between the US, UK and Iraq. [103532]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have a regular dialogue with the Iranian Government on this and other regional issues. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has discussed the situation in Iraq with the Iranian Foreign Minister on a number of occasions, most recently on 6 February.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many interviews the inspectors appointed under UNSCR 1441 have conducted with Iraqi scientists in locations outside of Iraq in conditions assuring confidentiality and safety for the scientists and their families. [103546]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There have been no interviews conducted outside Iraq.

Ivory Coast

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the Liberian Government on instability in the Ivory Coast. [102940]

Mr. Rammell: Liberian involvement in Cote d'Ivoire has contributed significantly to instability in the west of the country. The nature of Liberian involvement is complex, with reports of Liberians fighting for both sides. Liberia is used as a base by rebels fighting in the West of Cote d'Ivoire, and there are large numbers of Liberian mercenaries fighting for both sides. We remain concerned at the ease with which armed groups move between the two countries. We are also concerned about the plight of over 40,000 Liberian refugees in the region.

While we do not have a full picture of the role played by the Liberian Government in Cote d'Ivoire it is clear that it continues to ignore UN Security Council demands by sponsoring armed groups in the region. Our objective remains to contain these activities by maintaining effective UN sanctions against Liberia.

Kosovo

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what figures his Department has on the volume of heroin trafficked through Kosovo which was received in the United Kingdom in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002; and how many arrests have been made in Kosovo in respect of such trafficking. [103460]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Analysis of drug movement in Europe suggests that about 80 per cent. of the heroin reaching the United Kingdom is trafficked through the Balkans from its source in Afghanistan. We do not have figures on the volume of heroin trafficked through Kosovo to the UK.

United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) Police set up its central Drugs Squad in 2002. Last year it made 434 arrests in Kosovo for possession and trafficking of drugs.

Liberia

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of UN sanctions against Liberia in the last two years; and if he will make a statement. [102941]

Mr. Rammell: The UN imposed sanctions on Liberia as a result of the Liberian Government's complicity in fuelling the conflict in Sierra Leone. Liberia remains a serious threat to the stability of the sub-region. It has been involved in incursions into Guinea and is now being used as a base by rebels in Cote d'Ivoire. The sanctions are focused specifically on President Taylor and his ministers. We believe that they should be maintained until Liberia ends its efforts to destabilise the region.

Nuclear Disarmament

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps have been taken to implement the programme of action for nuclear disarmament that was signed up to in 2000; [103380]

(2) if he will make it his policy to restate the Government's commitment to the programme of action for nuclear disarmament that was signed in 2000 at the Non-Proliferation Treaty PrepCom in April 2003. [103379]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK remains fully committed to the Final Document adopted at the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) Review Conference in 2000.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence explained in answer to my hon. Friend's question of 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 1041W, the Government has taken substantial steps in fulfilment of its nuclear disarmament obligations under the NPT. Since 2000 we have continued to make significant progress, including dismantling the UK's last Chevaline warhead in April 2002. We have supported Nuclear-Weapon-Free Zones in Central Asia, South East Asia, and the Middle East. We also continue to press for negotiations to begin on a Fissile Material Cut-Off Treaty.

The United Kingdom supports moves towards mutual, balanced and verifiable reductions in nuclear weapons. We have always made clear that when we were satisfied with verifiable progress towards the elimination of nuclear weapons, we would ensure that our nuclear weapons were included in any negotiations.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government has taken to encourage (a) Israel, (b) India and (c) Pakistan to sign the nuclear Non Proliferation Treaty; and if he will make a statement. [103381]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have regular dialogue on non-proliferation issues with all three states. The issue of their non-signature of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT) forms an integral part of that dialogue.

The United Kingdom supports the implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 1172 which calls, among other things, for India and Pakistan to sign and ratify NPT.

We also take all opportunities to urge Israel to resolve international concerns about its nuclear status by acceding to the NPT as a non-nuclear weapons state and have consistently supported resolutions in the United Nations calling for the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the Middle East.

OPCW

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the US administration has paid its budgetary contributions to the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons on time. [103378]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The United States is the largest financial contributor to the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW). It usually pays its assessed contributions in two instalments, the first in April and the second in June. This amounts to a total of 14 million Euros, approximately 22 per cent. of the overall budget of the OPCW. Furthermore, towards the end of 2002 the US gave an additional voluntary contribution to the OPCW of US$2 million.

Translation and Interpreting Services

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's expenditure on (a) translation and (b) interpreting services was in 2002; and how many companies were asked to tender for such work. [103535]

Mr. Rammell: The FCO runs an in-house translation and interpreting service to meet the high level needs of the FCO, No. 10 and other Government Departments. It comprises a small number of in-house translators exercising quality control who supervise a large pool of experienced and trusted on-call translators and interpreters. For security reasons, this unit does not invite tenders for work in the open market. However, the pool translators and interpreters are self-employed, many operating as sole trader companies. Entry to the in-house team is via open competition, advertised periodically.

The expenditure through the in-house service in 2002 was:

translation—£497,311

interpreting—£258,456

Internal departments in the FCO and missions overseas are free to purchase all or any of their translation and interpreting requirements either from the in-house service or in the wider external market. No separate information is available regarding the expenditure on such services not purchased through the in-house service.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Accountancy Services

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the total cost to her Department was for accountancy services in 2002. [101856]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department entered into a nine year PFI contract with Liberata UK Ltd. (formerly CSL Group Ltd.) in January 1998. This contract covers a wide range of services including providing accounting systems, making payments, receipting and accounts production. The cost of accountancy services provided to the Department by Liberata under the contract, and from other external firms of accountants or their management consultancy arms where the assignment was connected with financial matters, in 2002–03 (to February 2003) was £5.7 million.

Court Rooms (Chorley)

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the wage rates were for court rooms in Chorley in each of the last three years. [100838]

Yvette Cooper: The costs of running Chorley Magistrates Courts are as follows:

	Employee costs (Salaries)	Other costs of running the court—eg accommodation, security, office equipment
2000–01	445,667	159,588
2001–02	481,072	176,180
2002–03[1]	426,000	177,155

[1] Projected

Courts Administration Councils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultation the Lord Chancellor's Department has conducted regarding the appointment of individuals to courts administration councils. [102654]

Yvette Cooper: The Government conducted a consultation exercise following publication of Sir Robin Auld's Review of the Criminal Courts. This informed the White Paper "Justice for All" published in July 2002 in which the Government said it wanted the unified courts administration to be developed by those closest to the business. As a result, the Central Council of Magistrates' Courts' Committees and the Association of Justices' Chief Executives both sit on the steering group overseeing the development of the new organisation.

Local consultation is a key part of the overall consultation process. A series of one-day discussion groups across the country is being run by my Department. Court users, the local magistracy, the judiciary and court staff are represented on these groups. They are considering, amongst other things, include how the size and membership of court administration councils might vary across the country according to local circumstances, and how these members should be appointed. The results from these groups will be fed into the development of the court administration councils and will also be reported to Parliament during the parliamentary passage of the Courts Bill.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Advertising Expenditure (Scotland)

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (e) sporting events. [102391]

Clare Short: It is not possible for DFID to show the "Scottish" proportion of our advertising spend in UK national newspapers/magazines, to the level of detail requested, because these national newspapers/magazines do not publish separate editions for Scotland.

However, details of available DFID expenditure for advertising in newspapers/magazines which are specifically Scottish, for the calendar years 2000 to 2002 inclusive, are as follows:

Calendar year	Advertising spend in Scottish Newspapers (£)
2000	16,816.95
2001	37,614.24
2002	18,430.02

DFID has not incurred expenditure on television, radio, billboard or sporting event advertising.

Antiretroviral Drugs

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of giving antiretroviral drugs to key workers in developing countries; and if she will make a statement. [103109]

Clare Short: The fight against the epidemic has to incorporate effective public health responses that engage in education, prevention, treatment, care, support, impact mitigation and related development concurrently. For any of these programmes to be successfully implemented, broad multi-sectoral approaches are crucial.

We are supporting national governments, within the context of their national HIV/AIDS plans, to consider the priorities and practicalities of implementing and scaling-up treatment for HIV/AIDS. The choices facing poor countries, partic[illegible]y around equity of access to treatment are difficult. In our view an open debate in countries, involving all sectors of society, will be critical in determining those priorities and responses. It is for each country to determine th[illegible] own priorities within national HIV/AIDS plans.

To assist countries in this process, we are funding research to support the introduction of anti-retroviral therapy in resource poor settings. This research will provide vital knowledge and evidence to better inform key policy decisions about access to treatment. We are carefully monitoring and sharing lessons on important issues including pro-poor impact, scaling-up, costs and systems to support HIV treatment.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the levels of food shortages in the Democratic Republic of Congo, broken down by region; and what food aid her Department has provided to the Democratic Republic of Congo, broken down by region. [102745]

Clare Short: No specific assessment of the levels of food shortages broken down by region has been made. The economic devastation resulting from the conflict has led to high malnutrition rates among internally displaced persons, refugees, children and the elderly. It is estimated that some 1.4 million people require urgent food aid.

My department is providing substantial help to efforts directed at reducing the suffering of civilians with urgent humanitarian needs in the DRC. This includes nutritional support to communities where high levels of malnutrition are being experienced. We have committed over £9 million in humanitarian support so far this financial year.

DFID are also providing support to the World Food Programme through its core funding to an agreed work plan.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the number of internally displaced people in the Democratic Republic of Congo, broken down by region; and what support she gives internally displaced people in the country, broken down by region. [102746]

Clare Short : According to the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (UN OCHA), over 500,000 people have been displaced in the Democratic Republic of Congo since the beginning of 2002, due mainly to intensified violence in the north-eastern Ituri and eastern South Kivu regions Despite the ceasefire and withdrawal of foreign troops, over 2.5 million of about 50 million Congolese are now displaced. Main causes have been fighting between rebel groups, attacks on civilians and resource plundering. Current UN OCHA statistics as at August 2002 show the following breakdown of internally displaced people (IDPs): Equateur: 85,000 IDPs; Orientale: 250,000 IDPs; North Kivu: 760,000 IDPs; South Kivu: 435,000 IDPs; Katanga: 415,000 IDPs; Maniema: 160,000 IDPs; Eastern Kasai & Western Kasai: 130,000 IDPs; Kinshasa: 40,000 IDPs. This does not take into account the more recent displacements since then including those as a result of the recent fighting in Ituri and in Bunia.

My department's humanitarian support is channelled through the UN agencies, Red Cross and international NGOs. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of assistance by region as we deliberately support agencies with national reach and perspective.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment she has made of the humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo as a result of the fighting. [102810]

Clare Short: UN and other relief agency reporting shows that there are very serious humanitarian consequences to the fighting in DRC. DFID is providing substantial help to efforts directed at reducing the suffering of civilians with urgent humanitarian needs in the DRC. Assistance provided this financial year has been provided through the UN agencies and the ICRC in response to their emergency appeals and through international NGOs in the following areas: health, nutrition, refugees. We have committed over £9 million in humanitarian support so far this financial year.

We stand ready to provide further humanitarian assistance to those in need.

Great Lakes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has for an integrated regional policy in the Great Lakes area; whether her Department will make a regional statement of intent to work on such a policy; and if she will make a statement. [103093]

Clare Short: My Department is actively engaged, in close collaboration with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in promoting an end to the conflict in the Great Lakes region and in preparing for regional post-conflict reconstruction and development. We are at present reviewing our strategies for post-conflict engagement in Rwanda, the DRC and Burundi in the light of recent regional developments. These documents will be made publicly available. Last week DFID hosted a roundtable discussion with a range of UK NGOs and academics to help define our approach to meeting development challenges in the DRC.

Each of these country strategies aims to set out the regional perspective of our policies and demonstrate our objectives for the region as a whole: the ending of conflict and the laying of the foundations for sustained development across the whole Great Lakes region with a consequent significant reduction in poverty

HIPC Initiative

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many countries have qualified for debt relief under the HIPC initiative; how much relief has been granted to those countries; and if she will make a statement on the prospects for qualification of other countries. [103022]

Clare Short: So far, 26 countries out of a total of 37 eligible countries have qualified for relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative, and will receive over US$62 billion in debt relief. Of these, seven countries (Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, Tanzania and Uganda) have reached Completion Point and have received irrevocable debt relief. The remaining 19 (Benin, Cameroon, Chad, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Nicaragua, Niger, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Zambia) are receiving interim relief on their debt repayments. We expect the bulk of these countries to reach Completion Point within the next two years when they, too, will receive full debt relief. It is difficult to predict when the other 11 countries will qualify for HIPC relief, as many are still affected by conflict and governance problems. We expect the Democratic Republic of the Congo to reach its Decision Point in the coming months, and the Central African Republic, Comoros and Cote d'Ivoire to do so later this year but, in some cases, this will depend on progress towards peace. The remaining countries (Burundi, Congo Republic, Liberia, Myanmar, Somalia, Sudan and Togo) are a long way from qualifying, as they are affected by conflict or have serious governance concerns.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether social and environmental criteria are used in addition to economic data in determining whether countries qualify for debt relief under the HIPC initiative. [103024]

Clare Short: The enhanced Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) Initiative is based on a set of clear and transparent rules, which countries entering the Initiative must meet. The IMF and the World bank work jointly with the governments of eligible countries on a debt sustainability analysis to determine their levels of debt. To qualify for relief, a country must have a debt sustainability ratio above one or other of the following HIPC thresholds: a debt stock of more than 150 per cent. of exports or of more than 250 per cent. of government revenue. Relief is provided to bring debt ratios down to these levels. This analysis is based on actual data on average exports over the previous three years and on central government revenues over the most recent year. Debt ratios reflect the impact of HIV/AIDS, droughts, and external shocks, such as changes in commodity prices, on a country's economy. Under the HIPC Initiative, additional relief—so called 'topping up'—can, when appropriate, be provided at Completion Point to ensure that countries exit the HIPC process with sustainable levels of debt. The UK is pressing for greater flexibility to ensure that this is provided wherever it is needed.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department gave in 2002–03 (a) to prevent the spread of HIV and AIDS and (b) to treat people with AIDS; and if she will make a statement. [103095]

Clare Short: My Department's HIV/AIDS effort is focused on several key areas. Bilaterally our funds are aimed primarily at supporting national policies and strategies through multisectoral HIV/AIDS plans. These strategies cover the continuum from prevention, treatment, care to impact mitigation. It is therefore not possible to aggregate the funding in the manner requested. The total of our spending on HIV/AIDS-related bilateral work for 2002–03 is not yet available. In 2001–02 our bilateral expenditure in this area was over £200 million.

Since 1997, we have committed £1.5 billion to help developing countries put in place and strengthen effective health care systems which will enable the poor to benefit from lower priced and better drugs to treat HIV/AIDS.

The Government's support for initiatives such as the Access to Medicines Working Group and Global Fund against AIDS, TB and Malaria is also facilitating increased access for poor people to HIV/AIDS treatment.

Mr. Robert Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate her Department has made of the income support needed by HIV and AIDS households in (a) Zambia, (b) Lesotho, (c) Malawi, (d) Mozambique, (e) Swaziland and (f) Zimbabwe, and if she will make a statement. [103094]

Clare Short: Zambia, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland and Zimbabwe have been deeply affected by a food security crisis brought about in part by an HIV/AIDS epidemic in the region. This crisis has increased the number of people in poverty and deepened the poverty of those already poor. There are significant challenges in establishing and targeting households that are infected or affected by HIV/AIDS, not least because of the stigma attached to the disease. There is also significant variation of need and general agreement that income support per se would therefore not be the most effective assistance.

Vulnerability assessments for all six countries show that HIV/AIDS affected households suffer from depletion of assets, reduced income, and increased expenditure on health and funerals, and that the presence of orphans decreases food security and other resources in already stressed households. HIV/AIDS affected households need support to counteract these impacts. This could be provided through home-based care that included community support, basic health care, sufficient food, help with income generation and assistance with access to education. DFID is working with governments in the region to reduce the vulnerability of poor households by improving rural livelihoods, strengthening community safety nets and delivering more and better basic services, taking particular account of the needs of households affected by HIV/AIDS.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department is doing to meet the targets adopted in the Declaration of Commitment signed at the UN General Assembly Special Session on HIV and AIDS in June 2001; what progress is being made in meeting the targets; and if she will make a statement. [103110]

Clare Short: My Department's entire HIV/AIDS programme is aimed at helping to achieve the targets agreed in the United Nations' Declaration of Commitment on HIV/AIDS.

UNAIDS is the agency tasked with measuring progress against the targets in the Declaration of Commitment. The United Nations Secretary-General will report annually based on national reports and other data collated by the United Nations. The Secretary-General's report for 2003 will be particularly important as many of the strategies for national action are due to be in place by the end of this year.

In his report on progress towards implementation of the Declaration of Commitment presented to the 57th Session of the General Assembly in 2002, the Secretary-General noted that while political commitment had increased and additional resources were devoted to HIV/AIDS, the scale of country level activities did not yet match the epidemic. In addition, while most countries had developed national AIDS strategies, implementation had been slow. Also, nearly one in two countries lacked a strategy for care and support of children orphaned or made vulnerable by the epidemic.

Future reports are expected to highlight progress made, identify gaps in knowledge and action, and will emphasise strategies for tackling the epidemic in the future.

Malnutrition (Eritrea and Malawi)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on levels of malnutrition in (a) Eritrea and (b) Malawi. [102747]

Clare Short: The information is as follows:

Eritrea

In a joint UN/Eritrean Relief and Refugee Commission (ERREC) briefing on 20 February global acute malnutrition rates in children under five were quoted as between 15 and 28 per cent. in the later half of 2002. The prevalence rate of severe acute malnutrition among children in Northern and Southern Red Sea Zones was quoted as 4 per cent.

Malawi

The next round of nutritional surveys will be in April. Those conducted in November 2002 showed global acute malnutrition rates ranging from 1.5 per cent. to 4.8 per cent. These are relatively low and within the normal rates for developing countries. However, chronic malnutrition (a combination of the effect of food shortages, recurrent infections and poor care practices) remains serious. A comprehensive analysis of underlying causes is being conducted.

New Partnership for Africa's Development

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the strength of the peer review mechanism of the New Partnership for Africa's Development. [102749]

Clare Short: At the Abuja meeting of the NEPAD implementation committee in November 2002, 13 countries signed up for peer review. There has been considerable debate since then clarifying the objectives of peer review; and on 9 March 2003 a Memorandum of Understanding was signed agreeing the mechanisms. The Africa Peer Review Mechanism (APRM) will be launched in April 2003. A group of Eminent Persons will oversee reviews carried out by technical experts. The UNECA will be involved in the technical reviews of economic governance and has had a series of useful exchanges on the process of peer review with the OECD DAC. The APRM should develop into a good mechanism for long-term sharing of best practice; African ownership will be key to its success.

Southern Africa

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of indigenous staple crops in Southern Africa; and what programmes there are for the re-introduction of such crops. [103082]

Clare Short: My Department has provided £12.5 million for research into indigenous staples (sorghum and millet) in Southern African countries over the last 10 years. We have supported the inclusion of sorghum and millet in seed packs distributed during the humanitarian crisis.

While sorghum and millet are more drought resistant than maize there is a problem of sustainability due to a general preference for maize. This affects the marketability of sorghum and millet and the extent to which they can become a part of a country's longer-term food strategy. We are following closely a joint CARE/FAO study in Zambia, which is assessing future market opportunities for sorghum and millet.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the development of root and tuber assessments in Southern Africa on (a) a national scale and (b) a regional scale; and if she will make a statement. [103083]

Clare Short: My Department has provided £2.8 million for research into roots and tubers in Southern Africa countries in the last 10 years. We have not supported an assessment at the regional scale.

The potential of roots and tubers to produce in poor soils is well recognised. As part of our response to the humanitarian situation in Southern Africa, my Department is supporting a number of food recovery programmes, some of which include cassava and sweet potato multiplication components that are aimed at increasing their availability in drought prone areas.

Sudan

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what reports she has received from (a) the World bank and (b) the IMF with regard to their assessment of the impact on development of Sudan of the purchase of an air traffic control system; and if she will place copies in the Library. [102885]

Clare Short: We have received no reports from the World bank or the IMF about the purchase of an air traffic control system by Sudan.

Ugandan Presidential Peace Team

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the Ugandan Presidential Peace Team. [102983]

Clare Short: Although the Peace Commission was established late last year, it is only recently that it has become engaged in attempting to negotiate with the LRA. It is too early in that process to judge the effectiveness of their activities but my officials in Kampala continue to carefully monitor events.

United Nations (Humanitarian Activities)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what additional donations have been made by the United Kingdom to the United Nations Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Activities Hypothecated in Support of Iraqi Citizens. [103132]

Clare Short: We are providing OCHA with £150,000 to support their contingency planning for Iraq. We are also providing an information management specialist to OCHA's Humanitarian Information Centre, which is being established in Larnaca, Cyprus.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Architects Registration Board

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many architects have been referred to the disciplinary committee of the Architects Registration Board (a) before being taken to court and (b) after court proceedings in each of the last five years. [103313]

Mr. Leslie: The number of architects referred to the Professional Conduct Committee (PCC) of the Architects Registration Board (ARB) in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number of cases	Remarks
1999	4	—
2000	6	—
2001	9	—
2002	5	—
2003	6	To date

Data are not held centrally, and may not have been disclosed to ARB, on whether legal proceedings have been taken after a finding of fault by the PCC. Data on whether legal proceedings material to the case have preceded a hearing by the PCC would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Council Tax (Armed Forces)

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will instruct local authorities to exempt members of the armed forces from paying council tax while serving in the Gulf. [103126]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to change the primary or secondary legislation concerning council tax exemptions, discounts and disregards other than those set out in the Local Government Bill currently before Parliament.

Departmental Energy Policy

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what capacity of electricity used in his Department's buildings is generated in a combined heat and power plant; and what plans he has to increase that capacity. [103228]

Mr. Leslie: Two of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister 's HQ buildings have combined heat and power plant, the total capacity of this equipment is 960kWe.

The Office presently has no plans to install equipment to further extend this capacity, but reviews the situation on an annual basis.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on support for victims of domestic violence. [102541]

Mrs. Roche: Tackling domestic violence, and supporting those who are victims of domestic violence, is a priority for the Government.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, in partnership with Comic Relief, have each allocated £1 million funding to set up a national freephone helpline for victims of domestic violence, underpinned by a 'refuges on line' database. This will bring together the advice services currently provided by Refuge and the Women's Aid Federation of England and will offer instant access to information on refuge accommodation and specialist services. It is anticipated that the full system will be fully operational towards the end of 2003.

In July 2002, the main homelessness provisions of the Homelessness Act 2002 and the Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) (England) Order 2002 were brought into force. These required local housing authorities to take a more strategic approach to preventing and tackling homelessness, placed stronger duties on authorities to help homeless people, and extended the groups of homeless applicants who have a priority need for accommodation, including, among others, people vulnerable as a result of fleeing their home because of violence. The Homelessness Directorate will be allocating £70 million in 2003–04 to local authorities to help them address homelessness. This will include some support for domestic violence schemes where local authorities have identified this as a priority.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has also announced at the end of last year a £7 million capital investment programme through the Housing Corporation to extend and renovate the national network of women's refuges in England. Initial allocations are being agreed with the Housing Corporation for 2003–04 and it is hoped that further schemes will be supported in the following two years.

The Supporting People programme, which begins on 1 April, will put in place a new integrated policy and funding framework for housing-related support services, including those for people experiencing domestic violence. Current annual expenditure is £34 million for a total of 5,000 places. Local authorities have now submitted their shadow Supporting People strategies. These are currently being analysed and will provide valuable data on the supply of refuge and support services for people experiencing domestic violence, so helping to inform and direct future action.

Supporting People guides have also been issued on addressing the accommodation and support needs of households experiencing domestic violence; and two dedicated co-ordinators are working with providers and local authorities to ensure that the sector is prepared for the new programme.

E-Mail Addresses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister by what e-mail address members of the public may contact (a) him and (b) each of the Ministers in his Department; and for each e-mail address if he will state (i) the date it became active and (ii) the number of e-mails received in each month since activation. EU Regional Policy

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to support the Declaration by Mayors and Leaders of Urban Areas for an ambitious European Union Regional Policy; and if he will make a statement. [103406]

Mr. Leslie: The Government's preferred approach to EU regional policy is set out in the consultation paper "A modern regional policy for the United Kingdom", which was published on 6 March.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister welcomes the recognition given by the mayors and leaders of urban areas, in their declaration, of the importance of urban areas, not least to the delivery of the Lisbon objectives.

The launch of the Government's paper on 6 March marked the beginning of a period of consultation in the UK on the future of the European Structural Funds, which will conclude on 4 July. We are actively seeking the views of all stakeholders, including the mayors and leaders of urban areas, during this process.

The Government is committed to an active regional policy that reduces regional disparities and helps all nations and regions.

Fire Service

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress he has made in developing the role of the fire and rescue service in respect of (a) mass decontamination and (b) national search and rescue under the fire new dimension project. [103295]

Mr. Raynsford: The procurement of mass decontamination equipment (in England and Wales) under the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's £56 million New Dimension programme is nearing completion. It will deliver 80 new vehicles and 190 purpose built decontamination units each capable of decontaminating some 200 people an hour; a range of new fire service equipment for detection and monitoring of radiation and hazardous substances at incidents; and 4,000 new gas tight suits—a doubling of present capacity—to enable fire-fighters to operate safely. Training for this enhanced role is planned to start in April, with deployment of the equipment to follow soon thereafter.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is also taking urgent steps to enhance the fire service's capability in urban search and rescue. We have made available £3 million for the training of trainers and responders in structural collapse techniques, the purchase of technical search and rescue and heavy rescue equipment, and the provision of training rigs at the Fire Service College. We have also made available some £2 million for the need of the capital. We are seeking to secure the funding for a major national investment next financial year to complete delivery of the investment.

Local Authority Employees

Mr. Key: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what statutory remedies are available to local authority staff who are victims of workplace bullying; [103536]

(2) what statutory remedies there are to deal with unreasonable behaviour by local authority senior management against council employees. [103537]

Mr. Leslie: The main acts of parliament that are in place to deal with unreasonable behaviour or workplace bullying are as follows:

Protection from Harassment Act 1997
Disability Discrimination Act 1995
Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994
Race Relations Act 1976
Sex Discrimination Act 1975
Health and Safety at Work Act 1974

Mr. Key: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what advice the Government have received from the Health and Safety Commission on options for action to make a significant impact on preventing assaults, verbal threats and abuse in the workplace for employees of local authorities. [103538]

Mr. Leslie: The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) is committed to tackling the problem of work-related violence. In March 2000 the HSC agreed a three-year programme to help employers tackle the problem of work-related violence. The programme builds on current and past initiatives and includes proposals for awareness raising, guidance and new research. It is particularly targeted at sectors that are most at risk of violence.

HSE has published general guidance for employers to help them tackle work-related violence, and sector-specific guidance covering health services and education.

Mr. Key: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will publish proposals under Section 3 of the Local Government Act 2000 for a code of conduct to protect employees of local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [103539]

Mr. Leslie: Part III of the Local Government Act 2000 provides for the Secretary of State to issue model codes of conduct as regards the members (section 50) and employees (section 82) of local authorities. Codes of conduct under section 50 were laid before Parliament in November 2002. These codes place obligations on members to treat others with respect and not to do anything which compromises the impartiality of those who work for the local authority.

Local Authority Spending (Torbay)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the standard spending assessments and formula spending share was for each year for Torbay Unitary Authority; what the percentage change in each year from the previous year has been; and what the aggregate external finance was for each year. [103284]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1 April 1998, when Torbay Unitary Authority was first created, there have been many changes in the functions and funding of services to Local Government. To enable a like-for-like comparison between years, we calculate adjusted Standard Spending Assessment's and grants. The percentage change figures have been calculated on the basis of these like-for-like comparisons.

Until the introduction of Central Support Protection Grant in 1999–2000, there was no need to calculate grant on a like-for-like basis, and for this reason grant comparisons in the years 1997–98 and 1998–99 are not available. There were no changes in funding and function between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 that needed reflecting in adjusted grants for 1998–99 to allow a like-for-like comparison; the actual 1998–99 values have therefore been used in this case.

In 2003–04, SSAs were replaced with Formula Spending Shares (FSSs). The 2003–04 total FSS figure has been compared to the FSS comparitor for 2002–03 in order to give a like-for-like comparison. The FSS comparitor for 2002–03 is similar to the adjusted 2002–03 SSA but with the increased resource equalisation also applied.

The adjusted 1997–98 total SSA figure for Torbay was calculated using the same formulae as for other education authorities, but assuming that the 1 April 1998 Local government reorganisations occurred a year earlier.

Planning

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister under what conditions planning applications for housing development will be exempted from his policy that all new developments should have densities of 30 dwellings per hectare or above. [82458]

Mr. McNulty: Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 Housing (PPG3) sets out national policy for making the best use of land in housing developments. Local authorities are expected to avoid developments which make inefficient use of land (those of less than 30 dwellings per hectare net). Housing proposals will be considered within the framework provided by the development plan as well as tested against the policies in PPG3. If there were local circumstances which justified a departure from national policy these should be set out in the plan.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to allow councillors on planning committees to make public statements on planning applications. [82714]

Mr. McNulty: The Local Government Act 2000 introduced a comprehensive ethical framework to local government. The framework required all authorities to adopt a local code of conduct, based on a national Model Code of Conduct, which members must give a written undertaking to observe. Ultimately it is for individual members to decide how they conduct themselves in carrying out official duties, including whether to make public statements, but if it is alleged that their conduct breaches the local code then they will be open to investigation by the Standards Board of England.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many properties were compulsorily purchased by regional development agencies in each year since 1999. [102684]

Alan Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The following table shows which Regional Development Agencies have purchased properties by compulsory purchase order, and how many in each of the relevant financial years.

Regional Governance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the reasons were for his Department's decision to publish the summary of the comments and enquiries received following the publication of the White Paper on Regional Governance. [103261]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government's White Paper 'Your Region, Your Choice' included a formal consultation on the involvement of stakeholders in the work of elected regional assemblies. It also invited views on the proposals set out in the White Paper generally.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published on 24 February an analysis of the views received in response to the consultation on stakeholder involvement, as is our usual practice.

Given the interest in our regional policy proposals both within and outside Parliament we concluded that it would be helpful and informative to publish a summary of the more general responses as well.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to propose legislation setting out the powers of the proposed elected regional assemblies. [103267]

Mr. Raynsford: The Regional Assemblies (Preparations) Bill now before Parliament makes provision for referendums on elected regional assemblies and for the associated local government reviews. Once at least one region has voted for an elected assembly, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister intend, when parliamentary time allows, to introduce a further Bill providing for the establishment of elected regional assemblies. This would make the necessary legislative provision for their constitutions, elections, powers and responsibilities. The Government's proposals on these matters are set out in the White Paper 'Your Region, Your Choice' (Cm 5511). The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will also consider whether a Bill might be published in draft before the first referendum.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many responses were received by his Department to the consultation on the interest in holding a referendum on regional government in the north-east. [103142]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister asked for responses by 3 March on the level of regional interest in each English region in holding a referendum for an elected regional assembly. We have received over 4,500 responses to date, of which just over 3,000 have been logged. Of those logged so far, approximately 300 are from the north-east.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is continuing to log responses and are beginning to evaluate them. We will announce our decisions after the Regional Assemblies (Preparations) Bill has received Royal Assent.

Ring-fenced Grants

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the Ring-Fenced grants available to local authorities in each year since 1997. [96909]

Mr. Raynsford: The information is as follows:

List of Ring-Fenced and Special Grants available in each Financial Year

The definition of ring-fencing used was updated last year to reflect the types of grant we now have. Some grants previously classified as ring-fenced are no longer classified in this way. The key distinction we make is that ring-fenced grants restrict local authority spending. For completeness the following list includes all special grants inside Aggregate External Finance. Those marked with an asterisk are not ring-fenced. Further details of classifications are in an annex to the freedoms and flexibilities announcement of 26 November.

Shared Home Ownership Schemes

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what evaluation has taken place of the effectiveness of shared home ownership schemes. [102653]

Mr. McNulty: Independent research "The Evaluation of the Low Cost Home Ownership Programme" commissioned by the former Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions (now the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister) and the Welsh Assembly Government was published in September 2002. Shared ownership was one of the components of the study, and the main messages from the research were that consumer satisfaction with low cost home ownership schemes was high and that schemes represented good value for money.

The issues will now be taken forward by the Home Ownership Task Force announced in "Sustainable communities: building for the future" on 5 February. The terms of reference for the task force will be announced shortly.

Shire Counties (Government Grants)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much money per head of population has been given in government grant to each of the shire counties in each of the last 10 years; and what the real terms changes were in each of those years. [103116]

Mr. Raynsford: The available information is in the following tables. The figures given are for formula grant, which comprises revenue support grant, redistributed business rates and Standard Service Assessment reduction grants (where appropriate).

There have been many changes to the functions and funding of local government services over the last ten years, and like-for-like comparisons of grants between years cannot be made for years when changes have taken place unless figures are adjusted to take account of the changes.

For years from 1999–2000, adjusted figures for individual shire county councils exist because they were needed to allow like-for-like comparisons as part of the floors and ceilings calculations.

For years before 1999–2000, adjusted grant figures for individual shire county councils do not exist. A like-for-like comparison between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 can, however, be made using unadjusted figures. This is because there were no changes in function or funding between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 that needed reflecting by adjusting the grant figures for 1998–99.

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 2002-03

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 401 cols. W755 - 944 10 - 21 March 2003

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Marine Accidents

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the number of (a) accidents and (b) fatalities in UK waters in each year since 1997 involving fisheries vessels, where vessel size to power ratio was identified as a contributory factor. [103695]

Mr. Jamieson: The Marine Accident Investigation Branch of the Department for Transport record details of accidents and fatalities involving UK registered vessels or occurring in UK 12 mile territorial waters. They have searched their records and been unable to identify any incidents involving fisheries vessels from 1997 to date where vessel size to power ratio was a contributory factor.

Road Safety

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on reflective strips for builders' skips. [103940]

Mr. Jamieson: The British Standards Institution has circulated a first draft of a proposed standard for high performance retroreflective materials, and is currently preparing a revised version taking account of the technical comments received. The Department intends, once the British Standard has been published, to consult on the proposal that local authorities should be able to specify the use of these products on builders' skips, as an alternative to using lamps in conjunction with lower grade retroreflective markings.

Road User Charging

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the illustrative (a) constant motoring costs and additional investment, (b) wider take up of local charging powers and (c) limited inter-urban charging scenarios, and the three illustrative scenarios combined, from the original 10-year plan have not been repeated using the new transport model; and how much he estimates it would cost the Department in (i) monetary terms and (ii) departmental manpower to carry them out. [103055]

Mr. Jamieson: There are several reasons why the scenarios have not been replicated. Our new National Transport Model is different to the one used for the original 10-year plan in a number of ways—including its multi-modal approach, more recent data and revised assumptions. Given this, attempting to replicate the scenarios would not provide us with useful information on the comparative performance of the two models. In addition, the information and assumptions on which the original scenarios were based has now been superseded, so the scenarios themselves would not be directly comparable.

The limited information which would be gleaned means that replicating the identical scenarios has not been a priority for the modelling team. To date, and for the foreseeable future, run time is dedicated to priority work being undertaken as part of the review and roll forward of the 10-year plan. I have not estimated what the monetary costs would be, but due to the complexity of the model runs, the scenarios could take up to two weeks to produce, at the expense of urgent work required for the review and roll forward of the Plan.

Air Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures the Safety Regulation Group takes to ensure that (a) flight crew and (b) air traffic controllers are not subject to harassment after submitting safety related reports (i) within and (ii) outside the Mandatory Occurrence Reporting Scheme; [103571]

(2) what measures the Safety Regulation Group has taken to ensure that (a) flight crew and (b) air traffic controllers are able to comply with the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998; [103574]

(3) how many times the Safety Regulation Group has revoked an air traffic controller's licence having received (a) an Overload Report and (b) a mandatory occurrence report; [103573]

(4) what steps the Safety Regulation Group takes to verify the (a) accuracy and (b) objectivity of the air traffic controller (i) Overload Report and (ii) mandatory occurrence reports. [103570]

Mr. Jamieson: The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) is included in the Public Interest Disclosure (Prescribed Persons) Order 1999 in respect of > "compliance with the requirements of civil aviation legislation, including aviation safety".

The CAA's Secretary and Legal Adviser is the first point of contact for those who wish to make a qualifying disclosure to CAA. Contact details are given in the Department of Trade and Industry Guide to the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998.

Any reports received by the CAA under the Mandatory Occurrence Reporting Scheme are distributed only to a Department with a direct interest in the content of that report and the anonymity of the author will be retained throughout. Any individual who considers that they have been harassed as a result of submitting a report to the CAA may make a complaint to the CAA.

Reports submitted outside the Mandatory Occurrence Scheme include those submitted by flight crew to the UK Confidential Human Factors Incident Reporting Programme (CHIRP). This programme provides a confidential reporting system for all individuals employed in or associated with the industries. In addition, the CAA meets annually with representatives of the British Airline Pilots Association where pilots' concerns may be raised in complete confidentiality and anonymity. And Air Traffic Controllers may, if they wish, file confidential reports directly to SRG.

The CAA is aware that an Overload or Mandatory Occurrence Report submitted by a controller may be written subjectively. Therefore, CAA requires that each Air Traffic Control Unit has a process in place which undertakes local investigations of such reports to verify their accuracy and objectivity.

The CAA has not revoked any Air Traffic Controller's Licence as a result of receiving an Overload or Mandatory Occurrence Report.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many unannounced inspections the Safety Regulation Group has carried out on civil air traffic control units within the last 30 months. [103572]

Mr. Jamieson: The Safety Regulation Group has not carried out any unannounced inspections of civil air traffic control units within the last 30 months.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether all the senior managers at the Safety Regulation Group have attained relevant qualifications required for their civil role and responsibilities; [103685]

(2) how many senior managers have been employed by the Safety Regulation Group over the last 30 months who had (a) a solely civil aviation background and (b) a solely military aviation background; [103686]

(3) how many senior managers are employed by the Safety Regulation Group; and how many of these senior managers have (a) a civil aviation background and (b) a military aviation background. [103684]

Mr. Jamieson: The Safety Regulation Group employs 43 senior managers. Of these:

28 have a civil aviation background
7 have a military aviation background
8 have both a civil and a military background

No senior managers have been recruited to the Safety Regulation Group from external sources over the last 30 months.

All senior managers at the Safety Regulation Group are selected and appointed on the basis of objective judgment as to their suitability for the role, with regard to qualifications, experience, knowledge and competence.

Internal Telephone Directory

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the most recent internal phone directory for the Department was published; how often it is updated; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [101784]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department's internal directory is held electronically and is continuously updated. The last paper copy produced was in November 2001 for the then DTLR. A copy will not therefore be placed in the Library.

London Underground

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 1159W, on London Underground, what the period is of the contract with the London Underground PPP Infrastructure Consortia; what the break and reassessment periods are; and if he will make a statement. [103447]

Mr. Jamieson: The full period in the contracts is 30 years. Periodic reviews are provided for at 7.5 year intervals.

National Transport Model

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many officials work on the National Transport Model. [103057]

Mr. Jamieson: Nine officials work directly on the development, maintenance and application of the National Transport Model.

Railways

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers travelled on the Great Western line in 2002 between (a) London Paddington and Reading and (b) Reading and London Paddington (i) each weekday on average, (ii) each weekend on average and (iii) on each day that the Reading Festival took place. [103356]

Mr. Jamieson: The information is not available in the form requested. The Strategic Rail Authority publishes annual passenger journey figures for each Train Operating Company in its Annual Report, a copy of which is placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 10 locations of greatest railway congestion, indicating how many trains pass per hour in each 1-hour period between 6 am and 10 pm on a typical weekday (a) in total and (b) per available track. [102256]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 11 March 2003]: There is no one standard method of measuring congestion.

The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) is developing Route Utilisation Strategies whose purpose is to identify the best overall use of the network. The SRA's Capacity Utilisation statement of principles, published in December 2002, has been placed in the House Libraries.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has had with the Strategic Rail Authority regarding the announcement of the draft specifications for the new arrangements for the Thames Trains franchise due to commence in April and May 2004; and if he will make a statement; [103297]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Strategic Rail Authority on plans for Great Western timetable restructuring in 2004; and if he will make a statement. [103324]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend has regular contact with the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) on the full range of its activities. The SRA is considering the process for the replacement of the current Thames

Trains franchise, which expires on 31 March 2004. The Great Western timetable is likely to change following the Great Western Main Line route utilisation strategy, which is expected to be implemented in 2004.

Rosyth

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many lorry movements he expects to divert from Hull to Rosyth as a result of his Department's grant assistance for new RO-RO facilities in Rosyth. [103839]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department's grant award to Forth Ports plc, Rosyth was predicated on the substantial environmental benefits which will arise through the saving of over 400,000 long distance lorry movements between Scotland and English ports over the next 10 years. It is estimated that around 40 per cent. of these movements would otherwise have passed through the port of Hull.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans Ministers in the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make ministerial announcements in April. [103662]

Mr. Jamieson: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

Traffic Estimates

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the estimates of traffic in 2000 will not be agreed until May 2003. [103056]

Mr. Jamieson: A re-assessment of the traffic figures, which began in 2002, has been a major exercise, but is now nearing completion. It is expected that the revised estimates for all years will be ready for the next Road Traffic Statistics Quarterly Bulletin due to be published on Thursday 8 May. This will be in accordance with the new National Statistics protocol on Release Practices, which requires the publication of revised estimates as soon as these are available.

TREASURY

Armed Forces (Gratuities)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to tax the gratuity which a member of the Armed Forces receives upon leaving. [103180]

Ruth Kelly: The current pensions simplification consultation document proposes that tax free lump sums paid from pensions schemes will only be available after the minimum age of 55. The Government is considering separately the position of members of the Armed Forces pension scheme in light of this proposal.

Child/Working Families Tax Credits

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish take-up figures for the child tax credit and the working families tax credit. [102990]

Dawn Primarolo: Statistics on the Child and Working Tax Credit will be published quarterly, beginning in August 2003. The first set of statistics will cover awards at early July 2003.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps has he taken to increase the level of UK private investment in less developed countries. [103522]

John Healey: The Chancellor has supported a range of initiatives to encourage foreign direct investment in developing countries. These include supporting the creation of new Investment Advisory Councils in developing countries which bring together public and private sectors together build a consensus, in the light of regional conditions, on how to secure higher levels of investment.

Additionally, the UK government provides funding through DfID for a joint project between the Commonwealth Business Council (CBC) and New Partnership for African Development (NEPAD). The project aims to encourage the private sector to work with the NEPAD programme of action, and stimulate the increased domestic and foreign investment required for NEPAD to succeed.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from (a) business groups and (b) development organisations regarding private investment in developing countries. [103523]

John Healey: The Government views the creation of favourable business environments in developing countries as an important driver for growth and development. To this end Ministers regularly meet with a wide range of academics, business leaders and NGOs. Both the Chancellor and the Secretary of State for International Development recently addressed a government sponsored international conference on 'Financing Sustainable Development, Poverty Reduction and the Private Sector'.

Fuel Tax

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the impact on road traffic levels he estimates would be from (a) a decrease in petrol duty by 5p a litre, (b) a decrease in petrol duty by 10p a litre, (c) an increase in petrol duty by 5p a litre, (d) an increase in petrol duty by 10p a litre, (e) an increase in petrol duty by 20p a litre and (f) an increase in petrol duty by 50p a litre; and what he estimates the change to revenues to the Treasury would be from (a) to (f). [102476]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

We are unable to estimate the impact on traffic of a change in the duty on petrol alone. The estimated effect of a 5p per litre reduction in duty on both petrol and diesel together, based on provisional traffic data for 2002, is to increase traffic levels by around 5.1 billion vehicle kilometres. Similarly, the estimated effect of increasing fuel duties by 5p per litre is to reduce traffic levels by 5.1 billion vehicle kilometres. Successive changes of 5p per litre in fuel duties are estimated to have effects of broadly the same magnitude, although the larger the change the greater the likely error in predicting its effects.

The impacts on revenue can be estimated from Table 6 in "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs", November 2002, published by HM Treasury.

Iraq

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the funding available to the Department for International Development to prepare for the humanitarian consequences of war with Iraq; and what contingency planning he has made to increase the funding available to the Department for International Development for this purpose. [100263]

Tony Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much additional funding has been given to the Department for International Development to help it prepare for and respond to the humanitarian consequences of war in Iraq. [102044]

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funding has been earmarked for humanitarian relief in (a) Iraq and (b) its neighbours. [103943]

Mr. Boateng: The Government have not yet made any firm estimates of the likely costs of humanitarian and reconstruction needs in Iraq if there was to be military action. The UK Government believe that the role of the United Nations and other multilateral institutions will be vital in addressing the reconstruction in Iraq if military action is taken. The UK Government will be fully involved in any humanitarian and reconstruction efforts in Iraq, alongside our international partners.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his statement of 3 February, Official Report, column 5WS, on the landfill tax credit scheme, to what extent the transitional funding is adequate to cover all eligible claims for transitional funding in England; and who will decide, and how, which of competing eligible claims receives funding. [103506]

John Healey: As my Statement of 3 February Official Report, column 7WS, made clear, the transitional funding is being administered by Entrust, the regulating body of the landfill tax credit scheme, on behalf of DEFRA. An Independent Assessment Panel decides whether projects in England meet the criteria set out in the Statement. All projects which meet the eligibility criteria will receive transition funding.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list internal flights made by Ministers in his Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (iii) economy class. [103581]

Ruth Kelly: As to flights taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of 27 February 2003, Official Report, column 694W. With regard to flights taken by other Treasury Ministers, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Royal Households

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ask the Inland Revenue to investigate the remuneration policies of the Royal households. [103824]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax affairs of the Royal Households and their employees are confidential in the same way as those of other taxpayers. Exemption 15 (Statutory and other restrictions) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans Ministers in the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make ministerial announcements in April. [103651]

Ruth Kelly: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

Tax Incentives

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned into the effect tax incentives may have on the level of UK private investment in less developed countries. [103521]

John Healey: The UK Government believes that the establishment of a good overall investment climate, rather than the use of tax incentives, is the most effective way of encouraging more productive private investment in developing countries. Through the Department for International Development the UK funds two research centres which conduct research into issues relating to private investment in developing countries.

Tobacco/Drink VAT Revenues

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the VAT revenue received from (a) advertising cigarettes, tobacco and related products and (b) advertising wine, spirits, beer and related products in each year since 1996. [103425]

John Healey: Any VAT relating to the advertising of tobacco or alcohol products will have been recoverable by VAT-registered purchasers of the advertising services. Therefore, such advertising has had no direct effect on VAT revenues.

The Tobacco Advertising and Promotion Act 2002 bans most advertising of tobacco products.

CABINET OFFICE

Policy Unit

Mr. Norman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many civil servants employed by (a) the Strategy Unit, (b) the Prime Minister's Delivery Unit, (c) the Office of the e-Envoy, (d) the Office of Public Services Reform and (e) the Prime Minister's Policy Unit have been (i) members of the Labour Party, (ii) employees of the Labour Party and (iii) employees of Labour hon. Members. [103065]

Mr. Alexander: The rules relating to the involvement of civil servants in political activities are set out in the "Civil Service Management Code". There is no requirement for Departments to collect information on civil servants' membership of political parties. Information relating to civil servants' previous employment is not maintained centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Service

Mr. Flight: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent assessment he has made of the efficiency of the Civil Service; and if he will make a statement. [101277]

Mr. Alexander: Government Departments are already subject to a range of similar external checks and disciplines:

performance of departments in delivering their PSA targets is assessed regularly by the Cabinet Committee on public services (PSX); departments are required to publish details of performance twice a year through departmental reports and the new autumn performance reports. These are subject to scrutiny through Parliament's departmental select committees;

overall performance of departments is assessed every two years through the Spending Reviews when new budgets and targets are set;

the Head of the Home Civil Service will be holding regular meetings with heads of departments to discuss progress on 'departmental change programmes'. The personal performance of individual Permanent Secretaries is also reviewed annually through the Permanent Secretaries' Remuneration Committee;

the National Audit Office undertakes a programme of detailed value for money studies covering the activities of each departments, and Accounting Officers may be called before the Public Accounts Committee;

the management of individual projects is subject to detailed scrutiny through the 'gateway' process led by the Office of Government Commerce.

Taken together these processes provide substantial pressure for the improvement of performance, and a high degree of accountability and transparency.

Forward Strategy Unit

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many people work in the Forward Strategy Unit; what issues it is looking at; what its running costs were in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [99884]

Mr. Alexander: The (Prime Minister's) Forward Strategy Unit is no longer in operation. In June 2002 it was merged with the Performance and Innovation Unit (PIU) and the Policy Studies Directorate of the Centre for Management and Policy Studies (CMPS), to create the Strategy Unit (SU).

The staffing of the Strategy Unit varies according to its work programme. It is currently around 90 full-time equivalents.

The Strategy Unit carries out long-term strategic reviews and policy analysis, which can take several forms:

long-term strategic reviews of major areas of policy;

studies of cross-cutting policy issues;

strategic audit; and working with departments to promote strategic thinking and improve policy making across Whitehall.

The unit is also leading on work to maintain the quality and standards of government social research.

Current Strategy Unit projects include:

Ethnic minorities and the labour market;

Alcohol harm reduction;

Costs and benefits of GM crops;

Local Government in the future;

London;

Drugs (jointly with the Home Office).

There are more details of the unit's past and present work on its website: www.strategy.gov.uk

(a) The estimated out-turn for the Strategy Unit's running costs in 2002–03 is £6,966,000.

(b) Budgets have yet to be set for 2003–04.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Dolphins

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what recent estimates the Government has made of dolphin bycatch deaths in UK fishing waters; [102789]

(2) what measures the Government plans to introduce to reduce incidents of dolphin bycatch by UK fishing boats. [102761]

Mr. Morley: The Sea Mammal Research Unit (SMRU) on behalf of Defra has carried out sample surveys of fisheries implicated in the bycatch of dolphins. These surveys have indicated a problem in the offshore bass fishery where the pair trawling teams monitored caught dolphins at a rate of approximately one every three hauls. However, bycatch information from other member states whose vessels operate in this fishery and elsewhere in UK waters is not available so it is not possible to produce reliable estimates of dolphin bycatch deaths in UK waters.

This reinforces the need for action on the part of all member states involved in the fisheries concerned and the Commission if measures to reduce dolphin deaths are to be effective. This is why we raised the need for urgent action at the January Council of Ministers' meeting. I have also raised this issue with Commissioner Fischler on a number of occasions both in writing and in personal contacts. I have also recently written to the Commission to press for urgent action to widen observer coverage off the South West coast where a number of other Member States' vessels fish. I was pleased that the Commission included a commitment to take action in this area in papers produced as part of the recent reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. I am looking for positive action on this in response to our recent approaches.

In the meantime, Defra has also committed some £140,000 for trials into the use of exclusion devices developed by the Sea Mammal Research Unit (SMRU) to reduce the bycatch of cetaceans in the offshore bass fishery. I will also, along with the devolved administrations, shortly be issuing a consultation document outlining a UK bycatch response strategy. This will set out the extent of our knowledge of bycatch in UK waters and make proposals for action to address the bycatch problem. The document will be laid in the Library of the House and I will ensure that my hon. Friend receives a personal copy.

Fur Farming

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what additional financial assistance will be given to those who previously fur farmed. [103820]

Mr. Morley: Licensed fur farm businesses, which closed down after the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Act 2000 received Royal Assent, will be able to claim compensation. A compensation scheme will be drawn up under the Act to provide payment for certain categories of loss.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many households in (a) Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) the North East and (d) the UK were in fuel poverty on (i) 1 February 1997 and (ii) 1 February 2003. [103557]

Mr. Wilson: The Government published "The UK Fuel Poverty Strategy 1st Annual Progress Report" on March 2003. This showed that the number of households in fuel poverty in the UK is estimated to have fallen from about 5½ million in 1996 to about 3 million in 2001.

The available information on fuel poverty in the is set out as follows. Figures are not available centrally for the Jarrow constituency or for South Tyneside.

Number and percentage of households in fuel poverty

	1996		1998		2001
	Number of households (thousands)	Percentage	Number of households (thousands)	Percentage	Number of households (thousands)	Percentage
North East	331	31.0	280	26.3	106	10.2
England	4,287	21.8	3,278	16.4	1,761	8.6

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to require auditors to owe a duty of care to individuals who are shareholders at the date of the audit report. [100916]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Company Law Review carefully considered the arguments for and against extending by statute those to whom a company's auditors owe a duty of care. The Final Report concluded, in the light of responses to consultation, that the case for statutory extension had not been made out and that negligence law in this field was best left to the normal process of case law. The Government is considering this recommendation as part of the wider issue of auditor liability.

Computer Contracts (Iraq)

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what export regulations apply to the computer and computer maintenance contracts between ICL/Fujitsu and the Government of Iraq; when approvals have been given; and if she will make a statement. [102870]

Nigel Griffiths: The export of computers, and goods required for their maintenance, from the UK to Iraq is controlled under the provisions of the Export of Goods (Control) (Iraq and Kuwait Sanctions) Order 1990. In addition, a UK company might require an individual licence to communicate, before entering into a contract to supply goods or services to Iraq, if the business they wished to discuss was not covered by the provisions of the Open General Licence to Communicate dated 19 November 1998.

The details of export licence applications from particular companies are normally commercially confidential and exempt from disclosure under exemptions 13 and 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. However, details of export licence applications from ICL, to export computer systems to Iraq prior to the imposition of UN sanctions in August 1990, were published in the 1996 Report of the Inquiry into the Export of Defence Equipment and Dual-Use Goods to Iraq and Related Prosecutions. A copy of the 1996 Scott Report is available from the Libraries of the House.

We have not been able to identify any export licence application from ICL or Fujitsu, to supply computers or related equipment to Iraq, since 2 May 1997.

Correspondence

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Minister for e-Commerce and Competitiveness will reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Wrexham of 27 November. [104003]

Mr. Timms: The reply was sent on 13 December 2002.

Disabled People

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what help is given to disabled people collecting benefits from post offices. [103558]

Mr. Timms: Compliance with the Disability Discrimination Act at any specific post office location is an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. in respect of Crown offices and the individual sub-postmaster in respect of sub-post offices. I have been informed by Post Office Ltd. that sub-postmasters have been provided with packs enabling them to audit their own offices for Disability Discrimination Act compliance and that advice will be provided by POL throughout the process.

Energy White Paper

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her Answer of 7 March 2003, Official Report, column 1290W, on the Energy White Paper, if she will place a copy of the nuclear and radiological skills study in the Library; what the URL is for the report on her Department's website; and if she will publish the (a) names and (b) affiliations of the members of the task group. [103306]

Mr. Wilson: Copies of the report of the nuclear and radiological skills study have been placed in the Library of the House and are also available on the DTI website at http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/nuclear/sldlls/nsg.shtml The report was produced by a group chaired by Professor John Chesshire and made up of people from the nuclear industry, academics and officials from my Department, the Department for Education and Skills, the Department of Health, the Ministry of Defence and the Health and Safety Executive. Full details are listed in the report.

Fireworks

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to restrict the sale and use of very noisy fireworks; and at what decibel level the restriction will be set. [101014]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Firework (Safety) Regulations 1997 prohibited the supply to the general public of aerial shells, shells-in-mortar and some other large and powerful fireworks including the category 4 type.

Fireworks meeting these Regulations must comply with BS7114. However, this standard does not set a maximum noise level.

As part of the work associated with the Fireworks Bill currently before Parliament, we are considering how best to control the level of noise emitted by fireworks.

Glass

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many tonnes of (a) green, (b) white and (c) brown glass were imported in each year since 1997. [103338]

Alan Johnson: The information is not available.

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many tonnes of (a) green, (b) white and (c) brown glass were manufactured in the UK in each year since 1997. [103337]

Alan Johnson: The information is not available.

Hydropower

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the contribution of hydropower on British rivers towards electricity production. [103320]

Mr. Wilson: The most recent statistics for year ending December 2001 show that hydro-power in the UK has an installed capacity of about 1500 MW which could be expected to produce between 4000 and 5000 Giga Watt Hours of electricity, the actual output being dependent on rainfall.

Iraq (Oil)

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what (a) discussions she has held with and (b) representations she has received from the US Government concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following any conflict which leads to regime change; [102750]

(2) what discussions she has had with ministerial colleagues concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following a conflict in the Middle East; [102757]

(3) what discussions she has held with multinational oil companies concerning the exploitation of Iraqi oil following any conflict in the Middle East. [102751]

Ms Hewitt: It is our position that Iraqi oil is owned by the Iraqi people. Its revenues should be used for the good of the people. We make this clear in all our contacts on the subject.

However, the current situation is not about oil, it is about weapons of mass destruction and the Iraqi regime deliberately flouting the will of the United Nations.

Ministerial Meeting

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the meeting between the hon. Member for Leicester, East and the Minister for E-Commerce on 10 March. [103222]

Mr. Timms: I met the hon. Member and a delegation representing the textiles and clothing industry in Leicester to discuss issues relating to the industry. I agreed to write to the hon. Member addressing the points raised at the meeting, which I will do shortly.

Motor Fuel

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations she has received advocating an investigation by the Competition Commission into motor fuel (a) retailing and (b) wholesaling. [103046]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In recent months, we are aware of having received one representation advocating an investigation by the competition authorities into motor fuel retailing or wholesaling.

Nuclear Exports (India)

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there is a complete embargo on exports of replacement parts for nuclear power stations in India. [103167]

Nigel Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the reply from my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr Bradshaw), the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Love) on 15 March 2002, Official Report, columns 1298–1300W.

A licence will not be issued where there is a clear risk that the items could contribute to weapons of Mass Destruction Programme.

Office of Fair Trading

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she plans to replace the computer licensing system at the Office of Fair Trading; and if she will make a statement. [102782]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Investment in the OFT's computer systems is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading to decide.

Pharmacies

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive Department for Health on the report from the Office of Fair Trading on the regulation of pharmacies. [103237]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 17 March 2003]: There have been a number of discussions between this Department and the Scottish Executive Department for Health and Community Care, at Ministerial and official level.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with representatives of the pharmacy profession in Scotland on the Office of Fair Trading report on the regulation of pharmacies. [103285]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Representations have been made to the Department of Health and Community Care at the Scottish Executive. This Department has been made aware of the content of those representations and officials have attended meetings in Scotland to hear the concerns of the profession directly.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to consult the Scottish Executive on the implications of the OFT report on pharmacists. [103178]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This Department is working co-operatively with health departments in all the devolved Administrations in considering the OFT report on Pharmacy entry controls.

Public Sector Docum[illegible]

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the impact on United Kingdom GDP of implementation of the Draft Directive on the re-use and commercial exploitation of public sector documents. [101087]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 10 March 2003]: It is too early to say with any certainty what impact the implementation of the Directive will be within the UK, and no estimate has been made, but the proposal, as amended within the Council Working Group and due to be considered at the 27 March Telecoms Council, is broadly consistent with the policy adopted within the UK in 2000. That policy, the result of the Cross-cutting Review of the Knowledge Economy, has meant that most central Government information is now licensed for re-use on a marginal cost basis, which in practical terms generally means free of charge. The UK reserved the right of Trading Funds, such as Ordnance Survey and the Met Office, to charge for their documents in a way that would allow them to obtain a reasonable return on investment, and that latitude is reflected in the Directive.

If the text is adopted, any effect on GDP would be from the easier re-use of European documents. This would depend on the extent to which UK companies and others took advantage of it. A provisional estimate carried out by Pira International for the European Commission in 2000 suggested that the annual economic benefit for the European Union as a whole would be between 28 billion Euro and 134 billion Euro.

Security (Nuclear Power Stations)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a further statement on the incursion by protesters into the Sizewell B nuclear plant on 13 January in respect of allegations that a serious breach of security occurred. [103025]

Mr. Wilson: I have nothing to add to the Statement I made on 28 February 2003, Official Report, columns 56–57WS, and to the Statement made by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Small Business on 14 January 2003, Official Report, columns 547–50.

Mr. Gummer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what research she has undertaken to ascertain the effects of a worst case scenario terrorist attack on Sizewell A and B Power stations; [102846]

(2) what assessment she has made of recent research into (a) the number of fatalities and (b) the other consequences that could arise as a result of terrorist attack on a nuclear power station. [102845]

Mr. Wilson: The Government have undertaken an assessment of potential terrorist acts against all civil nuclear power stations. The results are not published on the grounds that the information would be of value to potential terrorists.

There are well tried and tested contingency plans for dealing with the aftermath of an accident, terrorist attack or other incident affecting a nuclear power station. These have been developed over many years and practised regularly in a rolling programme of local site-based exercises involving the site operators and the relevant local and national agencies. The lessons of these exercises are taken forward both [illegible], and nationally through the DTI-chaired Nuclear Emergency Planning Liaison Group.

Tidal Energy

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received about the development of tidal energy lagoons off (a) the Welsh coast and (b) elsewhere in the UK. [103318]

Mr. Wilson: My Department has received a number of representations from one organisation regarding a tidal lagoon project in the UK.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent estimate she has made of the cost of power from (a) waves, (b) tidal stream, (c) tidal barrage and (d) tidal lagoons. [103446]

Mr. Wilson: A number of claims have been made about the cost of power from these technologies but as they have not yet been demonstrated as proven and reliable methods of electricity generation such estimates are speculative.

The exceptions to this are tidal barrage on which much work has been done in the past, particularly in respect of the Severn Barrage and tidal stream. A recent review of the Severn Scheme showed previous conclusions that such projects are uneconomic compared with other forms of electricity generation were unchanged.

In 2001 a study* which re-examined the commercial prospects for tidal stream power did make some cost estimates based on a single device concept. The likely cost of energy from this device were estimated in the range 4–6 p/kWh. However these are very tentative since the concept has yet to be demonstrated.

* The Commercial Prospects for Tidal Stream Power DTI/Pub URN 01/1011

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the feasibility of offshore tidal power generation. [103316]

Mr. Wilson: In 2001 a study was commissioned which re-examined the commercial prospects for tidal stream power*. The UK is at the forefront of development of technologies which harness this potential although this form of generation has yet to be shown to be commercial.

* The Commercial Prospects for Tidal Stream Power DTI/Pub URN 01/1011

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the potential of tidal energy lagoons to provide renewable energy in the UK. [103317]

Mr. Wilson: Tidal lagoons as with other forms of large scale barrage have potential to contribute to the UK's renewable energy targets. However, these schemes have a very substantial impact on the environment and in the case of lagoons their economics have yet to be demonstrated.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the role that non-barrage tidal power electricity generation could play in achieving renewable energy targets. [103529]

Mr. Wilson: The recent Energy White Paper acknowledged the potential contribution that tidal power technologies could make to achieving the Government's longer term renewable energy goals. In 2001 a study was commissioned which re-examined the commercial prospects for tidal stream power*.

* The Commercial Prospects for Tidal Stream Power DTI/Pub URN 01/1011

Veterans' Day

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will institute an annual holiday early in November, to be called Veterans' Day, in honour of those who have given their life in defence of the country. [103192]

Alan Johnson: The Government have no plans at present to increase the number of bank holidays.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he plans to have with member states of the European Union on the role the Union will play in future negotiations regarding Cyprus. [102375]

Mr. MacShane: Regrettably, it has not proven possible to secure a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus in time for a reunited island to sign the Treaty of Accession with the European Union on 16 April. As decided by the Copenhagen European Council, Cyprus will accede with the acquis suspended in the north of the island. The Commission will, in consultation with the government of Cyprus, consider ways of promoting economic development of the northern part of Cyprus and bringing it closer to the Union. The UK and the EU remain committed to efforts to achieve a comprehensive settlement within the framework of the UN Secretary-General's proposals of 26 February. However, as Mr. Annan made clear in his concluding statement in The Hague, an opportunity like the one so recently missed is unlikely to recur for some time.

Iraq

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what the source was of the material provided to UNSCOM about Iraq's attempts to obtain nuclear material in Africa; and if he will make a statement; [103861]

(2) if he will publish the evidence provided to UNSCOM that Iraq has tried to procure nuclear material in Africa. [103862]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The material provided was principally based upon intelligence reporting. It is not Government policy to disclose information on intelligence matters.

Israel

Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will call on Israel to disarm its weapons of mass destruction in accordance with United Nations Resolution 687. [103669]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly urge Israel to resolve international concerns about its nuclear status by acceding to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as a non-nuclear weapons state and to enter into a full-scope safeguards agreement with the IAEA. We also urge them to sign and ratify all other International treaties relating to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

The UK has consistently supported resolutions in the United Nations calling for the establishment of a zone free of weapons of mass destruction in the Middle East.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

English Heritage

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the administrative costs were of English Heritage for each Government office of the region in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03. [103290]

Dr. Howells: The administrative costs of English Heritage's Regional Offices are shown in the following table.

Region	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
East Midlands	205,600	236,152	261,283	259,300

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the administrative costs were of the New Opportunities Fund for each Government office of the region in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03. [103292]

Mr. Caborn: The New Opportunities Fund set up its England regional team in September 2001. The administrative costs in each region were:

2001–02	[1]36,250
2002–03	79,776

[1] Part-year costs

Sea Angling

Mr. John Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the promotion of recreational sea angling. [104015]

Mr. Caborn: The Government does not have responsibility for the promotion of particular sports. The National Federation of Sea Anglers, the sport's governing body, is funded through Sport England for the promotion and development of recreational sea angling.

The Joint Angling Governing Bodies (which includes the National Federation of Anglers), with support from Sport England, have launched their plan for the future of the angling, which includes; expanding participation; leading the angling community; improving performance and raising the profile of the sport.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions she has had with the National Federation of Sea Angling. [104016]

Mr. Caborn: I have had no such discussions. However, officials from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport recently met representatives from a wide range of sea angling interests, including the National Federation of Sea Anglers, along with representatives from the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

My officials also meet representatives from all the angling disciplines, including those from the National Federation of Sea Anglers each year at the Angling Summit.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action she is taking to maintain a national register of sports facilities; and if she will make a statement. [103225]

Mr. Caborn: My Department has announced our intention to establish an England-wide database of sports facilities. Information on sports facilities in England is currently held by a variety of organisations and a single database will enable more strategic Government investment in those areas and facilities that are most important.

Sport England has been working on the development of an England-wide database of sports facilities and have completed the first stage of work on the tendering process.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Careers Guidance

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether it is Government policy to make available individual careers guidance to all students at the close of their compulsory school years. [103087]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Careers education and guidance is available through schools and the Connexions Service to all young people aged 13–19 as and when they need it. Where a young person needs individual careers guidance at the close of their compulsory school years then this is made available.

Class Sizes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what average (a) primary and (b) secondary school class sizes were in England in each year from 1980–81 to 2003–04 (planned), (i) broken down by local education authority and (ii) in total; and if he will make a statement. [99820]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The required information is readily available for 1980, 1985, 1990 and each year from 1995 to 2002. A table giving this information has been placed in the Library.

Co-payments

Angela Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to introduce co-payments for the public services for which he is responsible; and for which services. [102203]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department for Education and Skills has no plans to introduce further co-payment arrangements, where the recipient of education services contributes to their cost, other than those that have already been published in the recent Higher Education White Paper.

Connexions Service

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what qualifications mentors working with Connexions are required to have. [103646]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Connexions Personal Advisers are drawn from a range of professional backgrounds. To be fully qualified they must possess an NVQ level 4 or equivalent in a relevant professional discipline (e.g. careers, youth work, social work) and have attended a bespoke training programme, either Understanding Connexions or the Diploma for Connexions Personal Advisers. Training is accredited by higher education institutions approved by the Connexions Service National Unit.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many mentors are retained in each region by Connexions partnerships; and what his estimate is of how many there will be at the end of 2003. [103649]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The latest Management Information collected from Partnerships shows that at the end of December 2002 there were 6,399 Connexions Personal Advisers in post. Broken down by region, the figures are as follows:

Region	Personal advisers[1]
South East	608
London	838
South West	731
East of England	450
West Midlands	879
East Midlands	493
Yorkshire and the Humber	799
North West	1,177
North East	424

[1] End December 2002

Note:
Data excludes Norfolk and Berkshire Partnerships which started January 2003.
Source:
Partnership MI at end December 200[illegible]

The funding provided in the Spending Review 2002 makes provision for this number to rise to almost 10,000 in 2004.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of mentors working with Connexions (a) have been checked by the Criminal Records Bureau and (b) are waiting for their checks to be completed. [103683]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Although Connexions Partnerships provide us with the numbers of Personal Advisers they have recruited, they are not required to provide data on the numbers who have been subject to List 99 and Criminal Records Bureau checks. To do so would serve no purpose as it is a legal requirement for employers to ensure that all Personal Advisers have been subjected to completed List 99 checks before they can come into direct contact with young people. Collecting information on the numbers checked would only serve to place an unnecessary burden on partnerships.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what rights a parent has to know (a) whether their child is being advised by a mentor from the Connexions service, (b) the name of that mentor, (c) the occasions when meetings have taken place and (d) the subjects that were discussed. [103648]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Connexions Partnerships will generally advertise the existence of the Connexions service within their locality. In addition, through the Partnership Agreement, Partnerships will work with schools, colleges and other appropriate institutions to make the availability of the Connexions Service known to parents and their sons and daughters; letting them know that it is available to all 13–19 year olds within their school or institution, via various contact points within the community or through the on-line service, Connexions Direct. Connexions Personal Advisers also strongly encourage young people to discuss any Connexions support with their parents but respect the right of the young person not to do so.

Partnerships are not obliged to notify parents that their child is actively involved with Connexions—either in one to one sessions with a Personal Adviser or through more general group sessions. The exception to this may be if the Personal Adviser is working with a young person in a school where it has been agreed that the school's confidentiality policy is followed, which may give the parents the right to know this information.

All information sharing policies drawn up by Connexions Partnerships must be in accordance with the Data Protection Act and other relevant legislation.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what contact mentors who have not been security checked by the Criminal Records Bureau are allowed to have with young people [103647]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Before being allowed any direct contact with young people—supervised or otherwise—all Personal Advisers must, as a minimum, have been List 99 cleared (a DfES maintained list of people whose employment working with young people has been barred or restricted by the Secretary of State). Partnerships must also carry out Criminal Records Bureau checks on all Personal Advisers. However, as List 99 provides robust clearance on child protection issues, Personal Advisers cleared in this way are able to have unsupervised, direct contact with young people while the Criminal Records Bureau check is undertaken.

The Financial Memorandum for Connexions Partnerships requires Connexions Partnerships to take all reasonable precautions to avoid employing any person convicted of a criminal offence involving an offence against the person, or an offence involving sexual behaviours, except with the prior written consent of the Secretary of State. Where the Criminal Records Bureau check reveals other such criminal convictions, it is up to the Partnership to decide if they wish to obtain this consent.

Lower-income Families

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what definition of lower-income families is used in the White Paper on Higher Education. [103783]

Margaret Hodge: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the Member for Birmingham Selly Oak on 6 February, Official Report, column. 358W

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) schools and (b) universities he and each of his ministerial colleagues have visited in the past 12 months. [102295]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Ministers have made 152 visits to schools and 30 visits to universities on departmental business since March 2002.

Short-listed Suppliers

Jim Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 25 February, ref 99110, how many short-listed suppliers (a) could and (b) could not meet the terms. [100051]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There were insufficient companies which met the terms and conditions of the framework exercise to offer an acceptable choice to schools.

The decision to abandon the procurement exercise was made in accordance with all appropriate regulations.

Special Schools

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many special schools have been operating for (a) visually and (b) hearing impaired children in each year since 1995. [102561]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The following table sets out the number of special schools operating for visually impaired (VI) and hearing impaired (HI) children.

	VI	HI	VI/HI/MSI	Total
1995	24	43	82	149
1996	24	43	82	149
1997	24	43	82	149
1998	24	43	81	148
1999	24	43	81	148
2000	24	43	80	147
2001	24	43	79	146
2002	23	42	79	144
2003	23	42	79	144

In addition to VI and HI schools the table identifies the special schools that make a combination of provision, which may also include multi-sensory impairment (MSI).

Truancy

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the truancy rates from pupil referral units were in each academic year since 1997. [102559]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Information on pupil attendance at Pupil Referral Units is not collected centrally.

DEFENCE

Anti-personnel Mines

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions since UK ratification of the Ottawa Treaty on which UK forces personnel have been involved with operations involving the use of anti-personnel mines by other countries. [102361]

Mr. Ingram: We do not keep records of which other nations use anti-personnel mines. The use of such weapons and compliance with the Ottawa Convention is a matter for individual nations. The United Kingdom's participation in operations with other countries is in full compliance with our obligations under the convention.

Depleted Uranium

Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the event of military action in Iraq (a) UK and (b) US forces will use tank shells containing depleted uranium. [103670]

Mr. Ingram: United Kingdom Forces currently deployed to the Gulf have depleted uranium tank munitions available as part of their armoury and will use them if necessary.

I am unable to comment on United States Forces' munitions.

Equipment Stocks

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stocks his Department holds, broken down by unit, of (a) desert boots, (b) desert clothing, (c) Combat 95 clothing and (d) tents; and if he will make a statement. [102807]

Mr. Ingram: With regard to boots and clothing, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 January 2003, Official Record, column 640W to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch).

With regard to tents, units hold only a small quantity of tents for use as administrative and storage facilities. Information on numbers at each unit is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Union

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the EU is involved in peacekeeping operations in Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement. [103864]

Mr. Ingram: There is no peacekeeping force in Afghanistan. The role of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) is to assist the Afghan Transitional Authority in the maintenance of security in Kabul and its surrounding areas so that the Authority and United Nations' personnel can operate in a secure environment. The deployment of the ISAF is authorised by the United Nations' Security Council Resolution 1444 and the European Union has no role in the Force.

Exercise Saif Sareea

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to resolve the (a) logistical, (b) communications and (c) equipment failures identified through Exercise Saif Sareea II. [84534]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 2 December 2003]: Exercise Saif Sareea II was a major success and demonstrated, as planned, key elements of the Joint Rapid Reaction concept. Many of the lessons identified have already been implemented including modifications to the challenger 2 Main Battle Tank to improve its performance in desert conditions and an environmental enhancement pack for the AS90 self-propelled gun. In addition, following the successful trial on Exercise Saif Sareea II Personal Role Radios have been issued to all those ground forces deployed to Kuwait who could potentially be involved in combat.

HMS Albion and Bulwark

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the estimated cost of building HMS Albion and Bulwark was; what their initial expected in-service date with the Royal Navy was; what his estimate of their actual building cost is; whether any additional cost will be met by the Government; and if he will make a statement. [102415]

Mr. Ingram: The maximum estimated cost to the Ministry of Defence at contract award of the Landing Platform Dock (Replacement) programme was £819 million, including the associated landing craft; the current estimated cost to the MOD is £790 million. The Prime Contractor has reported losses on the LPD(R) programme but there will be no additional costs to the MOD under the contract. It would not be appropriate to disclose an estimate of the actual cost to the Prime Contractor as the extent of their cost overrun is commercially confidential; I am therefore withholding this information under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The planned in-service dates were originally March 2002 for HMS Albion and March 2003 for HMS Bulwark.

Mines

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from what sources mines retained for training purposes as permitted under the Ottawa Treaty have been procured; and to what purposes they have been put. [101297]

Mr. Ingram: Mines retained for permitted purposes under the Ottawa Convention were kept from previous operational stocks and small numbers of different types have been procured from various sources. These have been declared in the United Kingdom's annual return to the Secretary-General of the United Nations in accordance with Article 7 of the Ottawa Convention.

Retained mines have been used for training in mine detection, mine clearance and mine destruction techniques as permitted in Article 3 of the Ottawa Convention. Specific purposes include: training explosive and mine detection dogs; training military and civilian mine clearance personnel; making relevant training films, videos, and posters; testing and trials of mine clearance devices; and testing and trials of protective clothing and equipment.

Weapons (Private Contractors)

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether surplus or redundant (a) small arms and (b) light weapons are (i) given and (ii) sold by the Department to private contractors. [103308]

Mr. Ingram: No surplus small arms or light weapons have been gifted to private contractors. No surplus small arms have been sold to private contractors in the last three years. Surplus light weapons would only be sold (via the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency) to the original equipment manufacturer in support of an export order.

PRIME MINISTER

EU Regional Policy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is leading on the revision of EU regional policy post-2006; if he will place in the Library a statement on the Cabinet Committee arrangements to deal with this issue; and if he will make a statement of the Government's policy. [103417]

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry leads on EU Structural Funds. The Deputy Prime Minister is responsible for policy on the English regions, as well as central oversight of devolution. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible for matters concerning the EC budget and the European Investment Bank. All three Ministers share responsibility for the PSA target on improving the economic performance of the English Regions.

The European Policy (EP) Committee is the Cabinet committee responsible for the issue. Details on the composition of the Committee are in the Libraries of the House and are published on the Cabinet Office website.

The Deputy Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry published a paper on 6 March entitled 'A Modern Regional Policy for the United Kingdom', which launched a joint consultation on the future of EU Structural Funds.

Iraq

Paul Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to publish amendments to his assessment in the document 'Iraq's Weapons of Mass Destruction' presented to the House in September 2002 arising from the evidence of UNMOVIC inspectors on Iraqi (a) bases, (b) presidential palaces and (c) uranium imports. [102883]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to publish an amended version of the dossier presented in September 2002, the contents of which still accurately reflect our assessment of the position with regard to Iraq's proscribed weapons programmes.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has revised his assessment of the threat posed by Iraq to the UK, following the statement on 7 March by the Director of the International Atomic Energy Agency; if he will make a statement of the source for his assertion that Saddam Hussein has been trying to buy significant quantities of uranium from Africa; and what action he is taking to verify intelligence documents which he has relied upon in forming policy. [103874]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the debate on Iraq in the House on 18 March 2003, Official Report.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Prime Minister how many meetings his Department has had with representatives of each of the partners represented in the Northern Ireland Assembly since 1 October 2002. [103258]

The Prime Minister: I and members of my office have had frequent meetings with political parties in Northern Ireland in recent months.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

HIV/AIDS (East Asia)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department is having with the governments of (a) China, (b) Japan, (c) Indonesia, (d) Philippines, (e) Malaysia, (f) North Korea, (g) South Korea, (h) Cambodia, (i) Burma, (j) Laos and (k) Vietnam on the spread and control of HIV and AIDS; and if she will make a statement. [103111]

Clare Short: Without sustained action in Asia, HIV/AIDS will have significant social and economic costs. It is estimated that over seven million people in Asia are already infected with HIV, 20 per cent. of the global total. Although HIV came later to Asia, it has made substantial inroads in a short time.

The epidemic in Asia varies dramatically between and within countries. Cambodia and Burma have significant national epidemics. Others are seeing concentrated epidemics in the most vulnerable populations, such as injecting drug users and sex workers. While prevalence is still low even among these groups in other countries, action now will prevent the pattern seen elsewhere of low prevalence for a number of years followed by rapid increases.

The spread of HIV/AIDS in is an issue which is a top priority for DFID in the region. Relevant targets for HIV/AIDS have been included in our Public Service Agreement.

In the countries in which DFID has a programme, HIV/AIDS is an issue that we continually raise in the context of policy discussions with governments about our development partnership. Our discussions cover a range of issues including priorities, targets and approaches. We have significant HIV/AIDS programmes in China, Cambodia, Burma and Vietnam. These are looking to strengthen national responses to HIV/AIDS through both targeted interventions for those groups most as risk, as well as improvements in the enabling environment for more effective action.

DFID does not have programmes in Japan, the Phillipines, Malaysia, North Korea or South Korea. Although we do have some discussions with the governments of some of these countries in the context of global financing instruments such as the Global Fund for HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria.

Iraq

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to address the shortcomings in preparedness for international relief in Iraq identified by the International Development Committee. [103268]

Clare Short: My Department has been fully engaged in recent months in trying to get the world to face the humanitarian risks of military action in Iraq, and make preparations. This work continues. We have provided £10 million to UN agencies and international NGOs to support their contingency planning. We are seconding specialist staff to the key offices which will have a key role in the coordination of any humanitarian effort (including UN OCHA and the UN Joint Logistics Centre, both in Cyprus; and the US's Office for Reconstruction in Humanitarian Affairs in Kuwait). And we are continuing to work towards establishing the right international mandates to enable the UN to take the lead role in relief and reconstruction, and to administer the Oil For Food Programme, in the event of conflict. I will provide a full written response to the recent report of the International Development committee in the next few days.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list internal flights made by Ministers in her Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (iii) economy class. [103586]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Chelmsford west on 26 February 2003, Official Report, column 555W and the central answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office to David Laws on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Refugee Camps (Pakistan)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the conditions of refugee camps in Pakistan. [102740]

Clare Short: UNHCR is running over 150 camps in Pakistan, housing approximately 1.5 million Afghan refugees. The camps provide health and education facilities, as well as basic shelter, water, sanitation and daily rations.

Conditions are basic, but generally adequate. The camps are monitored by UNHCR and we receive periodic reports. Direct access to the camps is difficult, not least because of security considerations.

We are aware of reports of higher than normal maternal mortality rates in the camps. Conditions for women and children are monitored by UNHCR Protection Officers, who have also dealt with cases of early and forced marriages, domestic violence and other problems faced by vulnerable refugees.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many times she has visited Scotland on official duties each year since 2000; and what meetings were held on each occasion. [103614]

Clare Short: I visited Scotland on official duties five times in 2000 and twice in 2002. I did not visit Scotland in 2001.

In line with exemptions 2 and 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, it is not the normal practice of Governments to release details of specific meetings or their content, as some of these discussions may have taken place on a confidential basis.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103615]

Clare Short: The rules relating to special advisers' political activities are set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Further guidance in respect of elections for the Scottish Parliament is set out at paragraph 13 of the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

The reasons for a special adviser's resignation are a private matter between the department and adviser, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under paragraph 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Information.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans ministers of the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make Ministerial announcements in April. [103654]

Clare Short: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

SCOTLAND

Community Pharmacies

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions she has had with the (a) Office of Fair Trading, (b) the Scottish Executive and (c) the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in relation to their recommendation that the control of entry regulations for community pharmacy should be lifted and its application to Scotland. [100609]

Mrs. McGuire: Since the Office of Fair Trading report was published, the Scottish Executive have been consulting key stakeholders in Scotland about the response to the report. The Scottish Executive have kept the Scotland Office informed about these consultations. Scotland Office officials have also participated in inter-departmental discussions on the report.

Departmental Telephone Directory

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the most recent internal phone directory for the Department was published; how often it is updated; and if she will place a copy in the Library. [101787]

Mrs. Liddell: A staff telephone directory is held electronically within the Department and it is updated regularly, as required. It is an internal document but key numbers are publicly available in publications such as the Civil Service Year Book.

Employers Liability Insurance

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive with regard to employers' liability insurance; [100578]

(2) what discussions she has had with the Department for Work and Pensions on its forthcoming report on employers' liability insurance. [100579]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office wrote to a number of organisations in Scotland to ensure that they were aware of the current review of employers' liability compulsory insurance. Both the Scotland Office and the Scottish Executive have received representations from the business community about this issue. We are ensuring that the Department for Work and Pensions are aware of the points made. DWP are keeping both the Scotland Office and the Scottish Executive closely informed about progress with the review. The Scotland Office is also a member of the Insurance Cover Working Group, set up by the Home Office, to consider issues facing the voluntary and community sector regarding insurance cover.

Friends of Scotland Website

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have visited the Friends of Scotland website from (a) the UK and (b) outside the UK. [102997]

Mrs. Liddell: Since its launch in July 2002, the Friends of Scotland web-site has proved highly successful. As at end February, it recorded 1,760,685 hits. There were 41,221 visits to the site; 26,290 (63.8 per cent.) with international domain names and a further 5,956 visits where the origin cannot be identified.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the cost has been of (a) setting up and (b) maintaining the Friends of Scotland website. [102998]

Mrs. Liddell: The current Friends of Scotland website was established on 23 July 2002. The start up cost was £73,583 including VAT. The website is proving to be a major success and continues to evolve and develop. As at end February, the estimated cost of maintenance and further development of the site is £43,000.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times since 2001 she has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied her on each trip. [95393]

Mrs. Liddell: I make regular flights between Scotland and London on departmental duties but information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Since 2001, I have accompanied my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister twice on non-commercial flights between London and Scotland. I have not used helicopters for travel within the United Kingdom.

All travel was undertaken in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Library.

Post Office Card Account

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the objective of Government policy in Scotland is to maximise take-up of post office card accounts; and if she will make a statement. [103177]

Mrs. McGuire: The Government's policy is to ensure that customers can choose the type of account that best suits their needs following the move to direct payment of state benefits. The Post Office card account is one of three options which benefit claimants are being presented with. Regardless whether claimants use the card account, an existing bank account or open a basic bank account, they will still be able to uplift benefits in cash at post offices.

Departmental Officer

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what her estimate is of the cost to the Scotland Office of the offices occupied by its staff in (a) Edinburgh, (b) Glasgow and (c) Leith in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [90379]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scotland Office was established in its present form on 1 July 1999.

The Department rents offices in Edinburgh and it shares accommodation in Glasgow and Leith with the Scottish Executive. The annual cost of occupying the offices was as follows:

1999–2000	*438,000
2000–01	721,000
2001–02	683,000

* From 1 July 1999

Note:

These costs include, where appropriate, rental, rates, heat and power, security, cleaning, repairs, maintenance and water.

Service Delivery Agreement

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scotland Office's service delivery agreement for 2003 to 2006 will be published. [94108]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scotland Office departmental report for 2003 will report on progress in relation to the 2002–03 Service Delivery Agreement. It will also provide key performance targets for 2003–04 but, given that the department does not have significant executive responsibilities, these will not constitute a Service Delivery Agreement as such.

Smoking

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what policy her Department has adopted on smoking in the workplace. [100924]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department discourages smoking in the workplace, due to its effects on health. Smoking is not, therefore, permitted at any time in buildings occupied by the Department, except in designated smoking areas. Such areas are made available, as a concession, only where it is practicable to do so.

Work Placements

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many university students her Department has supported or sponsored with a work placement in the last year; what her policy is on work placements; what plans she has to develop such schemes; and what her policy is on paying their university fees. [98539]

Mrs. Liddell: In the last year my Department has provided one university student work placement. We support the use of work placements and we shall look for opportunities to extend the scheme within the Department. My Department does not pay student university fees.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Bill

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Advocate-General pursuant to her oral answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 151W on the time limit for considering bills passed by the Scottish Parliament, what plans she has to consider the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Bill by 28 March. [102916]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: Since my oral answer of 11 March Official Report, column 151, Stage 3 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Bill took place on 12 March, and on that date the Bill was passed by the Scottish Parliament. The period of four weeks beginning with the passing of the Bill applies in terms of Section 33 of the Scotland Act 1998, and this is not affected by dissolution of the Scottish Parliament. As with all Bills, I will consider the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Bill during that period.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many successful applications there have been in (a) London and (b) other metropolitan authorities to set up arms length management organisations in each of the past three years. [103032]

Mr. McNulty: The following authorities have so far been allocated places on the Arms Length Management Organisation (ALMO) programme for improving the quality and management of local authority housing:

Round 1

London
Hounslow
Westminster
Metropolitan
Kirklees
Rochdale
Wigan
Other
Ashfield
Derby
Stockton-on-Tees

Round 2

London
Brent
Hillingdon
Kensington and Chelsea
Waltham Forest
Metropolitan
Barnsley
Bolton
Leeds
Oldham
Salford
Other
Blyth Valley
Carrick
Cheltenham
Colchester

All ALMOs in Round 1 have qualified for additional funding from 2002–03. Those in Round 2 have been offered additional funding from 2003–04 if they achieve at least a "good" rating from the Housing Inspectorate.

Brownfield Sites

Norman Baker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what mechanism exists to reclassify brown-field sites as green-field sites where the characteristics of a brown-field site are no longer present; and how much land has been thus reclassified since July 2001. [103828]

Mr. McNulty: There are various definitions of a brown-field site. The National Land Use Database (NLUD) uses the definition of 'previously-developed land' (PDL) provided by planning policy guidance for housing (PPG3). The definition excludes land that was

> "previously-developed but where the remains of any structure or activity have blended into the landscape in the process of time (to the extent that it can reasonably be considered as part of the natural surroundings), and where there is a clear reason that could outweigh the re-use of the site—such as its contribution to nature conservation—or it has subsequently been put to an amenity use and cannot be regarded as requiring redevelopment."

In updating NLUD-PDL records, local authorities should report changes to the status of a site (normally through redevelopment) but information of the type sought is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fire Prevention

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what Government funds have been allocated for fire prevention awareness in each of the past five years. [103671]

Mr. Raynsford: Funds have been allocated to the office's expenditure on increasing public awareness of fire safety and measures to prevent fire as follows:

	£ million
1998–99	0.8
1999–2000	2.9
2000–01	4.9
2001–02	5.9
2002–03	8.25

Fire Service

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what (a) appeal system and (b) independent body is available to local people in the event of a proposal to close a fire station following the repeal of section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947; and if he will make a statement; [103391]

(2) what measures the Government has in place to ensure effective local consultation following the repeal of section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 with respect to the fire service. [103390]

Mr. Raynsford: A fire authority is under a general duty under Best Value legislation to secure continuous improvement in the way in which its functions are exercised, having regard to a combination of economy, efficiency and effectiveness. This includes a requirement to consult locally about how to fulfil this duty. HM Fire Service Inspectorate will continue to monitor the performance of fire authorities in providing effective fire cover arrangements.

Draft guidance to fire authorities on the need to consult local communities about significant changes in fire cover following the proposed repeal of part of section 19 was placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 5 March. This draft guidance is being circulated to a wide range of stakeholders for comments.

Key Workers

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 330W, whether his Department considers a supermarket checkout operator to be a key worker. [103280]

Mr. McNulty: Support being provided by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister for key worker housing will target key public sector workers, as set out in 'Sustainable Communities: building for the future'. This excludes supermarket checkout operators. Wider housing policies to increase the supply of affordable housing will benefit key workers outside the public sector.

Light Pollution

Helen Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to encourage the use of downward directed lighting to improve the visibility of the night sky. [103181]

Mr. McNulty: The Government has issued "Lighting in the Countryside: Towards good practice" and guidance on good street lighting practice to encourage the use of lighting types which prevent or minimise unwanted upward illumination.

Planning

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is the timetable of expenditure for the additional monies allocated to planning. [103821]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister hopes to pay the allocations of planning delivery grant for 2003–04 to local authorities and national parks in early April and to the regional planning bodies in early May.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the twin-funding of planning applications. [103822]

Mr. McNulty: Planning services are funded from contributions by local taxpayers through council tax, precepts and levies, grant from central government (including the planning delivery grant), and fees paid by some applicants. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently undertaking a review of the fee regime which, among other things, is looking at the relative burdens on the contributors.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with local authorities and the Local Government Association on the subject of third party right of appeal, with specific reference to local authorities granting their own permission and departures from the local plans. [103823]

Mr. McNulty: None. The Government's position on third party rights of appeal was set out in the Planning Green Paper (published in December 2001). A wide range of bodies, including local authorities and the Local Government Association commented on the Green Paper.

Private Landlords

Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 12 February 2003, Official Report, column 840W, on private landlords, for what reasons he has not published the results of the consultation on selective licensing of private landlords in accordance with criterion 6 of Cabinet Office guidelines on written consultations; and if he will make a statement. [103019]

Mr. McNulty: The draft Housing Bill, to be published in the next few weeks, will make clear how the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister proposes to take forward the proposals contained in the consultation paper on the selective licensing of private landlords. The Bill will be subject to further consultation and parliamentary scrutiny and a summary of the responses to the earlier consultation will be published as part of the package accompanying the Bill.

Regional Governance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimates have been made by his Department as to the total cost of the soundings exercise on the level of interest in each English region in holding a referendum about establishing an elected regional assembly. [103262]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) on 14 January 2003, Official Report, columns 601–602W.

Right to Buy

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to publish the research undertaken by Bristol and Birmingham universities into the impact of the February 1999 changes to limits on Right to Buy discounts. [103233]

Mr. McNulty: It is expected that the research report will be published in early May 2003. A copy of the full report and summary of the research will be placed in the Library of the House at the time of publication.

Shared Ownership

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many Do-It-Yourself Shared Ownership (DIYSO) purchases were funded through (a) the Housing Corporation and (b) local authority social housing grant in each Government office region in each year since 1995–96; and how many DIYSO purchases were funded through (i) the Housing Corporation and (ii) local authority social housing grant in each local authority in London in each year since 1995–96. [102312]

Thames Gateway

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many new homes need to be built in the Thames Gateway London area to meet his targets as set out in his Sustainable Communities Plan. [98615]

Mr. McNulty: The draft Spatial Development Strategy for Greater London indicates that at least 46,000 new homes can be built by 2016 in the London Gateway development areas.

Jon Cruddas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whom he has consulted in determining the best approach for the development of the Thames Gateway London area and for setting up as an East London urban development corporation. [98618]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and his Ministers met on a regular basis with the members of the Thames Gateway Strategic Partnership to discuss delivery arrangements for Thames Gateway. He has also visited Thames Gateway and discussed delivery issues with local stakeholders.

NORTHERN IRELAND

"Get Home Safe" Campaign

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many alcohol-related incidents the Police Service of Northern Ireland dealt with in South Belfast in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002; and what impact the "Get Home Safe" Campaign has had. [103342]

Jane Kennedy: The statistics requested are not available as the PSNI does not maintain crime statistics on an alcohol related basis.

The "Get Home Safe" campaign has had a number of significant impacts namely:

The number of assaults was 535 compared to 654 for the same period in 2001—a decrease of 19.2 per cent.

The number of serious assaults was 158 compared to 236 for the same period in 2001—a decrease of 33 per cent.

Alcohol consumption was an element in 75 per cent. of all reported assaults

87 per cent. of the target group for the advertising campaign recalled some aspect of the campaign

40 per cent. of the target group claimed they had changed their behaviour arising from the campaign

Sexual assaults were reduced by 40 per cent.

Three new CCTV cameras provided by private sector funding

Almost 200 per cent. rise in the number of people reported for prosecution for disorderly behaviour (rather than a caution)

All illegal street traders removed, leading to significant reduction in disorderly incidents.

Banbridge Academy

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason the proposal contained in the Contenders List for the Schools Capital Building Programme to provide an extension and refurbishment to Banbridge Academy was unsuccessful; and what criteria were used to make this decision. [102932]

Jane Kennedy: The schools' capital programme is determined on the basis of the highest educational need within the resources available. A scheme to extend and refurbish Banbridge Academy was one of 46 high priority schemes that met the criteria to compete for funding in this year's programme. However, as there were insufficient resources for all the competing schools, funding was allocated on the basis of priority of educational need. Banbridge Academy was one of the schools that did not succeed this time round. The criteria used to prioritise educational need (in order of weight) takes account of the suitability for teaching and learning, the condition of the school and the number of temporary classrooms.

Courthouse Closures

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with the Lord Chancellor's Department about (a) the proposed closure of courthouses in Northern Ireland and (b) the timetable for such closures. [98331]

Mr. Browne: The management of the courts estate is the responsibility of the Lord Chancellor. During the past couple of years there have been a number of informal discussions between NIO Ministers and Ministers from the Lord Chancellor's Department on the issue of courthouse closures in Northern Ireland as part of normal business of keeping each other informed of developments.

Crime (South Belfast)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Chief Constable of the Police Service of Northern Ireland regarding increasing resources to tackle crime in South Belfast. [103340]

Jane Kennedy: The Secretary of State has been advised by the PSNI that they are currently reviewing resource levels in every District Command Unit. The findings of the review will be advised to Chief Officers and District Commanders in the near future.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to boost public confidence in safety from crime in South Belfast. [103341]

Jane Kennedy: The police in South Belfast plan the use of their resources to meet local community needs with a large percentage of personnel being exclusively dedicated to community policing. Crime Prevention and Community Safety Officers are responsible for the development and co-ordination of crime reduction strategies and crime prevention advice and guidance to vulnerable groups and those residing and working within crime "Hotspot" areas. Specific examples of a range of steps being taken to boost public confidence in safety from crime include:

the development of a Student/University/Resident Forum to address youth crime anti social behaviour and student related disorder.

The Get Home Safe Campaign, a project with a range of initiatives including: a door registration scheme involving the Federation of the Retail Licensed Trade, strict enforcement of drinking byelaws, the introduction of a radio link to improve communications between 37 licensed premises and the PSNI and three new CCTV provided by the private sector.

The promotion of Crimestoppers

15,000 leaflet drop to students living in South Belfast outlining crime prevention measures.

Early Release Scheme

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners have been released under the early release scheme since 10 April 1998; to which paramilitary groups they were affiliated; how many have been recalled due to further criminal activity; and how many would still be in prison today if the early release scheme was not in operation. [101737]

Jane Kennedy: Since the introduction of the early release scheme in April 1998, 447 prisoners have been released under the terms of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 ("the Act"). 156 were life sentence prisoners and 291 were determinate sentence prisoners.

The following table sets out details of the perceived paramilitary association of the 447 individuals released. Information is held, for management purposes, in relation to the perceived paramilitary association of prisoners in Northern Ireland.

At 10 March 2003, seven of the 447 persons released under the terms of the Act had been recalled to prison due to their involvement in further criminal activity during their licence period.

Of the 291 determinate sentence prisoners released under the Act, 54 (19 per cent.) had sentences which would not yet have expired and would still be in custody at this stage. It is not possible to provide an equivalent figure for the 156 life sentence prisoners. Unlike determinate sentence prisoners, there is no specific discharge date, each case being reviewed individually. All released lifers were subject to risk assessment as a requirement of the Act and remain on licence for life.

Education Funding

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding has been allocated to (a) each education board, (b) the statutory nursery school sector of each education board and (c) the private or voluntary playschool sector of each education board to provide PEAGS places in each of the past five years. [102023]

Jane Kennedy: Each Education and Library Board receives for its Pre-school Education Advisory Group (PEAG) a capital allocation for the PEAG's building programme of nursery schools and units, and a single recurrent allocation from which PEAGs must meet:

> the running costs of those nursery schools and units for a period between their opening and their being absorbed into the main schools budget; and > the costs of funding places in the voluntary and private sector.

Included in the recurrent allocations is an amount to assist the Boards with administrative and publicity costs. Recurrent funding for nursery schools and units after being absorbed into the main schools budget and for nursery schools and units pre-existing the Pre-School Education Expansion Programme, is allocated through LMS, and not to PEAGs.

The allocations to the Boards for the last five financial years are as follows. Separate allocations are not made in respect of the voluntary and private sectors.

All figures £000

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason the places per ward criterion used to calculate the funding for PEAGS places has not been used for calculating places for 2003–04. [101927]

Jane Kennedy: The Department of Education does not allocate funding to Pre-School Education Advisory Groups (PEAGs) using a places per ward criterion, but rather on the basis of annual plans for their areas produced by the PEAGs and approved by the Department. While in any given case PEAGs will look at the level of provision at individual ward level, they should also take into account the situation in neighbouring wards, so as to avoid over as well as under-provision.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will undertake to provide funding of PEAGS places for the Playgroup at Londonderry Primary School in Newtownards. [102021]

Jane Kennedy: I am satisfied that the present number of pre-school places in Newtownards funded by the South Eastern Board's Pre-school Education Advisory Group is sufficient to satisfy the demand from children in their final pre-school year. I am therefore unable to give the undertaking requested.

Giant's Causeway

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in establishing a world class visitor centre at the Giant's Causeway in County Antrim. [103349]

Mr. Pearson: I have met with the key players involved in establishing a world class visitors centre at the Giants Causeway and a further round of follow-up meetings with officials in my Department has also been concluded.

Efforts are now being made to exploit the common ground that has emerged from these discussions. While both myself and my colleague the Minister for Culture, Arts and Leisure are finalising our thoughts on a way forward, it should be stressed that progress will be achieved only if the relevant parties work together and with Government to ensure that a world class solution is achieved.

IT Contracts

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list IT contracts in his Department above £50 million in each of the last 10 years; what the inception date for each system was; when it became fully functional; when it became fully debugged; and what the cost of over-runs has been. [99002]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office, during the last 10 years have not awarded any IT contracts above £50 million.

The Northern Ireland Administration, during the last 10 years, have not awarded any IT contracts above £50 million.

Job Sharing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the extent of job sharing in his Department. [90863]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In the Northern Ireland Office 34 out of 1,596 full-time equivalent staff job share.

Job sharing is only one of a number of alternative and flexible working patterns that employees are welcome to take up. There are also, for example, 142 who work part-time.

In the Northern Ireland Administration 276 out of the 26,300 permanent staff employed job share.

Job sharing is only one of a number of work-life balance options available to employees. Over 2,500 work part-time hours. Flexible working hours and alternative working patterns also operate.

As a major employer, the Northern Ireland Civil Service has for many years recognised the benefits that both individuals and the organisation can realise by enabling employees to have a flexible approach to their working day.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost of (a) ministerial cars and drivers and (b) taxis for his Department was in 2002. [101543]

Jane Kennedy: The cost of (a) ministerial cars and drivers, and (b) taxis for the Northern Ireland Office for the 2001–02 financial year was:

(a) Ministerial cars and drivers: £361,083.83

(b) Taxis for the Department: £18,007.60

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team in 2002; and what the (a) purpose and (b) cost was in each case. [101485]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information for 2002–03 will be published as soon as possible after the end of the financial year.

Peace II

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding is available to each Northern Ireland Department in respect of Peace II; how much has been (a) distributed and (b) committed; for how much applications have been received but funding has not yet been committed; how much remains for which the process has not yet begun; and how much the Department will be unable to process before the deadline. [102564]

Mr. Pearson: Northern Ireland Departments are Implementing Bodies for some £152 million of the Peace II Programme. The information requested for this expenditure is set out in the following table. All Departments have indicated that the full amounts will be committed before the 31 December 2004 deadline.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of each category of (a) officers and (b) staff left the Police Service in each of the past three years, broken down by perceived community origin and sex. [101064]

Jane Kennedy: The number of police officers who have left the Police Service in the past three years, broken down into perceived community origin and gender, are shown in the following table. Data are also included in respect of civilian staff directly recruited into the police service but are only available for the past two years. Data for civilian staff do not include details of those staff currently or previously attached to the police service on secondment from the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) women and (b) members of the ethnic minorities have been recruited by the Police Service of Northern Ireland since the coming into operation of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000. [93668]

Mr. Browne: Since 4 November 2001, 196 women have been appointed to the Police Service, a figure which represents 32 per cent. of the total number of 613 recruits.

Only one member of an ethnic minority has been appointed since that time.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people claiming links to (a) the UUP, (b) the SDLP, (c) the DUP, (d) Sinn Fein, (e) the Alliance Party, (f) the Northern Ireland Women's Coalition, (g) the PUP, (h) the UKUP and (i) other political groupings or independent political candidates (i) applied to sit on a District Police Partnership (DPP), (ii) were judged appointable to a DPP and (iii) were appointed to a DPP. [103343]

Jane Kennedy: All candidates for appointment as independent members of District Policing Partnerships were asked a political activity monitoring question, in line with the guide to public appointments. The information was not made available to the council or Policing Board panels. The Board panels considered anonymised lists of appointable candidates. The information requested is set out in the following table.

Sex Education

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the advice issued by the Department of Education on the teaching of sex education in Northern Ireland. [103628]

Jane Kennedy: Following a major consultation exercise with interested parties and organisations conducted by the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment, on 24 August 2001 the Department of Education issued to all schools a circular on Relationships and Sexuality Education (RSE), together with comprehensive teacher guidance material, intended to help schools develop their own policy on RSE and provide a programme of RSE appropriate to the needs and maturity of their pupils.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Department and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93511]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In the Northern Ireland Office unauthorised absence is recorded as unpaid leave and is associated with other properly authorised unpaid absence and cannot be disaggregated.

Sick absence figures are recorded by financial year for Northern Ireland Civil Servants (NIGS) and by calendar year for Home Civil Service (HCS) staff.

The available information is as follows:

Northern Ireland Civil Servants

	Days sick absence per staff year
	2000–01	2001–02
Core Department (including Compensation Agency and Forensic Science Agency)	12.8	13.4
Northern Ireland Prison Service—(non-uniformed grades)	11.9	15.4

Two NICS staff are on secondment to NIO NDPBs and no sick absence was reported.

The Northern Ireland Departments have set composite targets for a reduction in sick absence from 15.1 days in 2000–01 to 13.9 days by the end of 2002–03 and 13.0 days by the end of 2004–05. The NIO aims to achieve similar reductions in respect of NICS staff in the Department.

Home Civil Servants

Year	Days sick absence per staff year
1998	6.5
1999	8.0
2000	9.3
2001	10.0

The figures for 2002 will be available shortly.

All Whitehall Departments were required in 1999 to reduce sickness absence by 20 per cent. by 2001 and by 30 per cent. by 2003. For the Northern Ireland Office (HCS staff) this was measured against the 1998 baseline of 6.5 days.

A range of initiatives has been implemented to assist in reducing sickness absence rates for both staff groups. These include raising awareness of stress management, a departmental health awareness programme, development of a departmental action plan to deliver workplace health improvement, provision of family friendly policies and fair application of inefficiency procedures.

In addition the Department plans to delegate responsibility for attendance management to line managers later this year and it is hoped that greater involvement at line management level will have a positive impact on the rate of sick absence.

In the Northern Ireland Administration unauthorised absence is recorded as unpaid leave and is associated with other properly authorised unpaid absence and cannot be disaggregated.

The information sought is only readily available for non-industrial civil servants for the period 1999–2000 to 2001–02. Comparable figures for industrial civil servants, agencies and non-departmental public bodies are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The following table reflects the average number of working days lost for the financial years 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 for each of the Northern Ireland Departments. Published statistics for 2000–01 and 2001–02 for Northern Ireland Departments are accessible www.dfpni.gov.uk/publications.

	Number of days lost per staff year
Department	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
DEL	16.5	17.9	19.0
DSD	18.5	18.6	18.4
DCAL	12.7	14.7	14.6
DHSSPS	14.1	12.9	14.6
DOE	14.6	14.6	14.1
DFP	11.3	12.8	13.5
DE	13.7	15.7	13.2
DETI	13.2	12.4	13.0
DARD	13.8	12.2	11.8
OFMDFM	10.4	9.7	11.6
DRD	11.4	12.2	11.4
Overall	15.3	15.1	15.1

Due to the reorganisation of Departments following devolution, the 1999–2000 absence details were analysed according to the Department in which staff were employed at the end of the 1999–2000 financial year. The departmental figures incorporate those for their respective Agencies.

Northern Ireland Departments have now set individual business driven targets for reduction. When brought together they constitute composite targets for a reduction from a sick absence rate of 15.1 days in 2000–01 to 13.9 days by the end of 2002–03 and 13.0 days by the end of 2004–05.

The most recent report for 2001–02 identifies an improvement in sick absence levels in a number of Departments but the overall absence level for NI Departments has not changed. While it is recognised that the last two to three years have been a period of major change and upheaval for NI Departments nonetheless the current levels of sick absence continue to be a cause for major concern.

A range of corporate and departmental initiatives has been and is being taken forward to reduce the current levels of sickness absence. These include a major work force health survey; the introduction of an awareness leaflet for GPs on the support and early return mechanisms available to NICS staff; appointment of two "site" based occupational health nurses on a pilot basis; approval to recruit a psychiatric nurse; and websites on "Attendance Matters" and "Health Matters" to assist NICS managers and staff.

Small Businesses

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many small businesses have gone out of business in Northern Ireland in each year since 1997. [103255]

Mr. Pearson: The number of insolvency orders (bankruptcy and compulsory winding up) made against individuals and small businesses in each of the last six financial years is as follows:

Financial year	Number of insolvency orders
1996–97	411
1997–98	432
1998–99	421
1999–2000	393
2000–01	338
2001–02	265

Social Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many social housing tenancies will not be varied before the end of March 2003; and whether the tenancies in Northern Ireland will be financially protected as a result of this new measure. [103278]

Mr. Browne: As at 10 March 2003, of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's (NIHE) currently occupied stock of 103,353 tenancies and the Housing Association's combined stock of 20, 000, only 887 tenants have been required to or are pending a completion of a Deed of Variation to their current tenancy agreement. This variation is required to enable "Support" to be paid a Transitional Housing Benefit.

The Department for Social Development has advised the NIHE that in line with practice across the UK, it will honour the total amount of valid Transitional Housing Benefit claims received at 31 March 2003.

Supporting People Project

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the funds allocated for the Supporting People Project throughout the United Kingdom will be given to Northern Ireland; and whether the funding is in line with the Barnett Formula. [103277]

Mr. Pearson: In Northern Ireland funding for supporting people will, in common with the other parts of the United Kingdom, be based upon actual requirements for the three-year period commencing 1 April 2003, rather than upon the Barnett Formula. The Department of Finance and Personnel, in consultation with the Department for Social Development, is currently in negotiations with HM Treasury to agree the allocations.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been identified by the health and social services trusts for transitional housing benefit through the Supporting People Project; and of those identified for benefit, how many will receive it. [103279]

Mr. Browne: A total of 887 people have been identified. All those who apply with valid transitional Housing Benefit claims received before 31 March 2003, will be paid.

Unemployment

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current trends in (a) long-term and (b) youth unemployment in Northern Ireland. [103242]

Mr. Pearson: Latest estimates from the autumn 2002 Labour Force Survey (LFS) indicate that there were 18,000 persons long-term unemployed representing 41 per cent. of the total number of unemployed persons. The total long-term unemployed over the past five years has decreased by just over 40 per cent. from 31,000 in autumn 1997 to 18,000 in autumn 2002.

The youth unemployment latest estimates indicate that there were 13,000 persons aged 18–24 who were unemployed, with an associated unemployment rate of 12.0 per cent. Over the five-year period from autumn 1997 youth unemployment has decreased from 18,000 to 13,000 in autumn 2002.

Urban Renewal

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been allocated for (a) housing improvements and (b) urban renewal areas in each Belfast constituency in each year since 1999. [103244]

Mr. Browne: The information is not available in the format requested. However, the following table gives the information by Northern Ireland Housing Executive district.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list of (a) private sector providers of places for asylum seekers as at 31 December 2002, (b) the number of places with each provider, (c) the number of places in each parliamentary constituency and (d) the number of places from each provider in each parliamentary constituency. [102907]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 18 March 2003]: The information is not available in the precise format requested. The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has entered into contracts with the private and public sector to provide accommodation for asylum seekers who are being dispersed. The private sector companies with whom NASS has entered into such contracts are as follows: Adelphi Hotels; Angel Group; Accommodata Ltd; Capital Accommodation Ltd; Clearsprings; Landmark; Leena Homes and Roselodge.

Details of individual contracts between NASS and its accommodation providers are confidential and I am unable to provide information on the number of bedspaces provided by each provider. NASS records of dispersal accommodation do not show the parliamentary constituency in which they are located.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his Answer of 5 March 2003, Official Report, column 1076W, on asylum seekers, how many child asylum seekers were refused asylum in each year from 1997; what the most common reasons were for refusal; and how many were deported. [103401]

Beverley Hughes: The table shows initial decisions, made between 1997 and 2002, excluding appeals and other subsequent outcomes, made on asylum applications from applicants claiming to be aged under 18. These figures exclude dependants, and may overstate since some applicants aged 18 or over may claim to be younger. The table contains estimates based on cases where information is available.

The available data showing for the main categories for refusal are also given in the table. These data may overstate the number of children who were refused asylum and exceptional leave to remain. This is due to the inclusion of cases whereby the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) believe the applicant is aged over 18, therefore these applicants are treated as an age dispute case.

Data on the age of those asylum seekers who were removed from the United Kingdom are not available except by examination of individual case-files at disproportionate cost.

Information on asylum decisions is published annually in the statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the Library and from the RDS web site: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Applicants and decisions: Initial Decisions, excluding dependants, made on asylum applications in the United Kingdom, on applicants aged under 18 at the time of initial decision by year 1997 to 2002

[1] Figures are an estimation. Estimated using pro-rata to publication from Raw Refugee index data.

[2] Estimated figures rounded to the nearest 50. These data are not compatible with data for 2001 and 2002.

[3] Figures rounded to the nearest five.

[4] Provisional figures.

Notes:

1. Decision figures do not necessarily relate to applications received in the given year.
2. Information is of initial decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions.
3. Data may overstate as some applicants over the age of 18 may claim to be younger

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were waiting for an initial decision for (a) less than two months, (b) two to six months, (c) six months to a year and (d) over a year at December (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002. [103421]

Beverley Hughes: The available information is shown in the table. This information includes cases that are currently under consideration.

Asylum cases awaiting an initial decision

	Number of months awaiting initial decision[1]

[1] Data have been estimated and are rounded to the nearest 100.

[2] Data are not available

[3] Data are provisional.

Provisional data show that 60 per cent. of applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases) received in 2001–02 had initial decisions reached and served within two months, 78 per cent. within four months and 84 per cent. within six months. 76 per cent. of applications (excluding withdrawals and third country cases) received in the period April to September 2002 had initial decisions reached and served within two months.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many burglaries were reported to the police in the (a) Greater London area and (b) England in the last year that figures are available; and how many of those have been resolved. [102233]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The number of burglary offences recorded and detected by the police for the 12 months to March 2002, are given in the table.

Cannabis

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish his response to the criticism by UNGASS of the Government's proposed reclassification of cannabis. [102805]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Copies of my letter to Herr Herbert Schaepe, the Secretary to the International Narcotics Control Board, will be placed in the Library.

Community Sentences

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Anti-Social Behaviour Orders, (b) Parenting Orders and (c) Curfew Orders have been issued in York in each of the last three years. [102644]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information is as follows:

(a) Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) were introduced from 1 April 1999. Information held centrally up to 31 May 2000 is for the number of ASBOs issued within England and Wales by police force area only.

From 1 June 2000 official statistics on the number of ASBOs issued within England and Wales are based on quarterly returns from Magistrates' Courts Committees (MCCs). From copies of the orders we have been able to identify local authority areas involved. The number of notifications received by the Home Office of ASBOs issued in York, from 1 June 2000 to 30 September 2002 (latest available) is six.

We are aware that the numbers of ASBOs made nationally have been consistently under-reported in returns made by magistrates' courts and are considering how reporting can be improved.

(b) Youth Justice Board figures indicate that between April 2000 and December 2002 a total of eight Parenting Orders were imposed in York.

(c) Figures from the electronic monitoring contractors indicate that six Curfew Orders with electronic monitoring were imposed in York during the period 2000 to 2002.

No applications have yet been received to establish a local child curfew scheme under section 14 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Some local authorities and police forces have considered the possibility but concluded that other measures should be taken to tackle relevant local problems.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter dated 20 January 2003 from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding his constituent Mr. R. Edgar of Peterhead. [102388]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 13 March 2003]: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Chelmsford of 11 November 2002, ref 23338/2. [102933]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 17 March 2003]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 11 March 2003.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the percentage clear-up rate for crimes in Wales was in each year since 1997. [102536]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The requested information is given in the following table.

Percentage

	Detection rate
1997[1]	41
1997–98[2]	41
1998–99[3]	46
1999–2000[4]	40
2000–01[4]	41
2001–02[4,5]	39

[1] Recorded on a calendar year basis up to 1997, and then on a financial year basis thereafter.

[2] The number of crimes recorded in that financial year using the coverage and rules in use until 31 March 1998.

[3] The number of crimes recorded in that financial year using the expanded offence coverage and revised counting rules which came into effect on 1 April 1998.

[4] Revised detections guidance was implemented on 1 April 1999.

[5] Three out of the four police force areas in Wales (Dyfed Powys, North Wales and South Wales) adopted the principles of the National Crime Recording Standard (NCRS) prior to its national introduction across England and Wales on 1 April 2002. This may have affected the detection rates given.

There was a change in counting rules for detections on 1 April 1999. The new instructions provide more precise and rigorous criteria for recording a detection, with the underlying emphasis on the successful result of a police investigation. Numbers of detections before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the heads under which City of York Council received money to tackle crime in each year since 1997; and how much was received in each case. [102649]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The following table outlines the heads under which programme funding has been provided to the City of York Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership since 1997 to tackle crime and identifies the level of funding in each case.

[2] The Basic Command Unit Fund will be provided to the Central region of North Yorkshire Police of which the City of York is a part. This funding is for use within the Partnership.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on crime committed by asylum applicants residing in the United Kingdom. [102923]

Beverley Hughes: We take very seriously any criminal or anti-social acts committed by asylum seekers. Although there is no evidence to suggest that asylum seekers are disproportionately likely to commit crime, we have taken powers in the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 to prevent serious criminals availing themselves of the protection of the 1951 Refugee Convention. We will seek to remove such criminals from the United Kingdom wherever possible.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders were recorded in (a) the Chelmsford division of Essex police and (b) Essex in each year since 1997, broken down by category. [103120]

Hilary Benn: It is not possible, from the information collected centrally, to separately identify offenders convicted or cautioned in the Essex police division of Chelmsford. The table gives offenders found guilty at all courts or cautioned ('known offenders') in Essex for the years 1997 to 2001 by offence group.

Figures for 2002 will be published in the autumn.

[1] Offenders found guilty only; motoring offences may attract written warnings.

Mr. Andrew Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers residing in the UK have been prosecuted for (a) sexual crime, (b) violent crime, (c) robbery and (d) other criminal offences in each year from 1997 to 2003; and what the total cost to public funds has been of such prosecutions. [102922]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his statement of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 32–36WS, on the Criminal Records Bureau, what steps his Department is taking to moderate public expectations of the role of the Criminal Records Bureau. [101390]

Hilary Benn: The Summary Independent Review Team report placed in the Library on 27 February 2003 contains the statement "we are concerned that public expectations are possibly unreasonably high and that there needs to be a clear recognition that the (Disclosure) process cannot provide complete security".

The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) has worked with the National Association of Care and Resettlement of Offenders (NACRO) and the Chartered Institute of Personnel and Development to produce two publications 'Recruiting Safely' and 'Employing People

With Conviction'. These are available to customers and are issued to all organisations registering with the CRB to gain access to Standard and Enhanced Disclosures and are also available on request from the CRB website. These publications are aimed at employers and volunteering organisations that wish to use criminal record information as part of their recruitment process. Both publications set the Disclosure service into context and demonstrate that if used it should be as part of a wider range of pre-employment checks.

This message will continue to be given out to our customers and the general public when the CRB attends exhibitions, conferences and speaking engagements, and makes customer visits, as well as in CRB newsletters and publications.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have made applications for clearance by the Criminal Records Bureau on more than one occasion since it was formed; and what proportion of these have resulted in an applicant being charged more than one fee for the service. [101602]

Hilary Benn: There is no facility available at present to extract from the Criminal Records Bureau's (CRB) database the number of people who have applied for more than one Disclosure or how many times they have been charged. Under the legislation a fee is due for each fresh application for a Disclosure.

Prospective employees may be requested to apply for Disclosure for each position they have applied for. The CRB has issued portability guidance for Disclosures to the Registered Bodies, and encourages them to avoid unnecessary additional Disclosure applications for the same individual. However, the decision on accepting a previous Disclosure rests with the individual Registered Body.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many referrals have been received by the Criminal Records Bureau since its inception; how many of those referrals have been completed and responded to; how many are pending; and how many the bureau was unable to fulfil; [101603]

(2) what proportion of applicants for clearance by the Criminal Records Bureau from within the teaching profession have not yet received their Disclosure certificates. [101601]

Hilary Benn: Since 11 March when the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) launched its Disclosure service, the Bureau has received 1,388,896 applications for Disclosure, of which 1,267,561 have been issued. 50,000 of the remaining applications are currently outside our three-week service standard. This figure has reduced from its peak of 109,000 during the summer of 2002 as a direct consequence of the targeted work that is being done to clear the oldest applications from the system.

For the last four months the CRB has issued, on average more Disclosures out each week than it has received applications for, thereby reducing the number of outstanding cases. The CRB is issuing on average around 42,000 Disclosures per week, which is well over double the weekly output issued by the police under the previous arrangements. The CRB fulfil all Disclosures that are processed through the system. In some cases, forms are returned to the Registered Body or the applicant because the form is incomplete and cannot be processed. The information sought by the hon. Member regarding the proportion of applicants from within the teaching profession who have not received their Disclosure is not available in the format requested. There are no IT procedures at present to extract these data from the CRB database. It is expected that this functionality will become available in subsequent system releases. No distinction is made in relation to the profession of an applicant. They are all subject to the same level of service.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions the Criminal Records Bureau has supplied inaccurate information about an individual; on how many occasions the supply of inaccurate information resulted in (a) the denial of a job to that individual and (b) the offer of a job to an individual who would normally be disbarred from taking that job; and if he will make a statement. [101790]

Hilary Benn: Up to and including the end of February 2003 there have been 400 instances where applicant details supplied by the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) to the police has led to mistakenly matching conviction details with an applicant. This represents 0.03 per cent. of all Disclosures issued, a total that currently stands at 1,269,367.

The decision on whether an applicant is suitable to take up a position following a Disclosure rests solely with the employer. It is therefore not possible to provide an answer regarding the employment of people following a Disclosure. However, the CRB does have procedures in place for applicants to dispute the information provided on their Disclosure. If upon investigation the CRB finds that the conviction does not relate to the person for whom the Disclosure was issued they will re- issue a corrected Disclosure free of charge. Prior to the CRB operation, had an applicant applied for a position which was police checked under the previous arrangements, details of any alleged convictions would have been passed only to the prospective employer and not to the applicant. That prospective employer would have had no obligation to pass on the contents to the applicant, who could have been oblivious of the facts. As it is, applicants now have the opportunity to dispute any conviction details.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the type of disclosure needed from the Criminal Records Bureau for members of the clergy and other religious bodies. [102522]

Hilary Benn: As with other types of position, the level of disclosure for which an applicant would be eligible would depend upon the particular duties. But a position which entailed regularly caring for, training, supervising or being in sole charge of persons under the age of 18, or of vulnerable adults (as defined), would be eligible for the highest level of disclosure, Enhanced.

Drug Treatment (Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding has been made available for the rehabilitation of drug offenders in Essex in each year since 1997. [103119]

Hilary Benn: Information is not available in the form requested.

The pooled treatment budget, introduced in 2001–02 provides funding for the treatment and rehabilitation of people with drug problems, including offenders. Drug Action Teams (DAT) use their pooled treatment budget allocations, together with additional resources from health authorities and other sources to fund treatment provision in their areas.

There are three drug action teams covering Essex: Southend, Thurrock and Essex, which covers the remainder of the county. The level of pooled treatment budget funding allocated to the three Essex DATs in 2001–02 was £4.056 million. This figure increased in 2002–03 to £5.306 million.

In 2003–04, the pooled treatment allocation for the three Essex DATs will increase to £5.579 million.

Firearms

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many incidents of gun-related crime were recorded in (a) Lancashire, (b) the North West of England, (c) England, (d) Wales and (e) the UK in each year since 1997; [90965]

(2) how many people have been (a) injured and (b) killed by guns in (i) Lancashire and (ii) the North West of England in (a) 2002 and (b) each of the previous five years. [90977]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Available published data on the number of recorded homicide offences in which firearms were reported to have been used are given in the table.

	Number of homicide offences involving firearms
	Lancashire	North West of England
1997	1	11
1998–99	1	5
1999–2000	2	14
2000–01	2	15

Note:

Figures for injuries are not available.

The total number of recorded crimes in which firearms (including air weapons) were reported to have been used are given in the table.

	Lancashire	North West of England	England	Wales
1997	163	1,751	11,816	594
1998–99	179	2,308	13,283	591
1999–2000	227	2,619	16,234	712
2000–01	233	2,983	17,083	614

These firearms offences were published on a calendar year basis up to 1997, and on a financial year basis thereafter. The figures for the North West and England for 2000–01 have been slightly revised since they were published.

There was a change of counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998. Numbers of recorded crimes before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable. Similarly, some police forces adopted the principles of the National Crime Recording Standard in advance of its national implementation; for example, Lancashire did so in 2000–01. This will mean that the figures for 2000–01 for Lancashire, the North West and England in the above table will not be directly comparable with the previous year. Both of these changes in recorded crime will have the effect of increasing the number of crimes counted.

Information relating to Scotland Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland (Helen Liddell) and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Paul Murphy).

Operation Street Cred

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 186W, on Operation Street Cred, if he will make a statement on the timescale of review of Operation Street Cred in Wirral. [102687]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Further to my right hon. Friend's (John Denham) answer to my right hon. Friend of 20 January 2002, Official Report, column 180W. I am advised by Merseyside police that they have now completed their formal review of Operation Street Cred which shows that it is proving a success. There has been a 16 per cent. decline in youth disorder over the past six months and of the 700 young people who came to the notice of the police for anti-social behaviour only 20 came to notice for a second time and only one for a third time. The Street Cred database will also provide useful information to local agencies dealing with anti-social behaviour and will ensure that young people can be dealt with in the most effective and appropriate way for their own good and that of the community.

Parenting Orders

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parenting orders were issued by each local authority in 2001–02. [103397]

Hilary Benn: Figures for Parenting Orders are collected by Youth Offending Teams and are not available by Local Authority area. . The table provides details of the 1,216 Parenting Orders made during the year from April 2001 by Youth Offending Team area in descending order. Parenting Orders made April 2001/ March 2002.

Police (North Yorkshire)

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers North Yorkshire police employed in (a) 1991, (b) 1997 and (c) 2002. [102645]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Information about the number of uniformed police officers is not collected centrally. Total police officer and civilian support staff strength figures for North Yorkshire are given in the following table. The force had a record number of officers at 31 March 2002.

North Yorkshire police

	Police officer strength	Civilian support staff
31 March 1991	1,387	449
31 March 1997	1,338	519
31 March 2002	1,417	743

Source:
Home Office Statistical Bulletins—Police Service Strength—1997 to 2002 and historical data.

By 31 March 2002, total police service strength in England and Wales had reached the record number of 129,603, on track for the Government's targets of 130,000 by March 2003 and 132,500 in 2004.

Under the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) recruitment initiative North Yorkshire police were allocated 68 recruits over and above the force's previous recruitment plans for the three years to March 2003. In 2003–04, in addition to funding for the continuing cost of these recruits, a further £23,000 will be available to the force from the Crime Fighting Fund. We estimate that this will allow a strength increase of up to four officers by the end of 2003–04.

Police Officers (Shootings)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were (a) shot at, (b) injured by shootings and (c) killed by shootings in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [103023]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Available published figures on the number of recorded crimes by the police in which a police officer on duty was injured by a firearm, are given in the table. Figures for the last five years are recorded on a financial year basis.

	Fatal injury	Injuries

1999–2000	—	10
2000–01	—	8

1. Details of officers shot at are not available.

2. The figures given in the table may not include only shootings, but injuries due to use of a firearm as a blunt instrument.

3. Figures for firearm crime for 2000–01 have been updated owing to discrepancies discovered when the figures for the number of non-air weapon offences for 2000–01 and 2001–02 by police force area were forwarded to the police.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from the Indian community were recruited into each police force in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [103507]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information is not available in the format requested. Figures collated by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary break down ethnicity by Asian/Asian British categorisation only and relate to officer strength rather than recruits.

The following table shows the number of these officers in each force at 31 March during the last five years.

Probation Service

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average number of offenders under supervision per probation officer was in each probation area in each of the last five years. [102451]

Hilary Benn: The average number of offenders under court order supervision per maingrade probation officer as at 31 December in each of the last five years is given in the table.

Since 1998 there have been significant changes in the way in which the services of the National Probation Service (NPS) have been delivered, with increasing growth in the use of probation service officers (PSOs) and trainee probation officers to support the work of the trained probation officer. Both the numbers of PSOs and trainees have increased significantly in the last few years, meaning that there has been a significant increase (20.09 per cent.) overall in the numbers of probation staff with direct responsibility for the supervision of offenders. While the figures published in Probation Statistics may reflect the average numbers of offenders who are assigned to each probation officer, they do not accurately reflect the supervision work delivered by the Probation Service for offenders. I will arrange for a short briefing note prepared by the National Probation Directorate (NPD) which explains this situation more fully to be placed in the Library.

Sexual Offences Bill

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the impact of the Sexual Offences Bill for (a) naturists and (b) those who (i) work as nude models and (ii) paint and draw nudes. [102437]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 12 March 2003]: We neither expect nor intend the proposals in the Bill to have any impact on naturists, or those who work as nude models or who paint and draw nudes.

Clause 70 of the Sexual Offences Bill proposes to make it an offence for someone to expose their genitals knowing or intending that someone will see them and knowing, intending or, in certain circumstances, being reckless as to whether the person seeing them will be caused alarm or distress. People who are "flashed" at in the street often find this a disturbing experience. It follows that anyone who wishes to be naked in situations where others will see them must continue to give careful consideration as to the effect that might have on those others.

The Bill is not intended to restrict the normal leisure activities of naturists who are exercising their preference for being naked among others who feel the same. Exposure will only be an offence where the person knows or intends that a person who sees his or her genitals will be caused alarm or distress or where he or she foresees a risk that such a person will be caused alarm or distress and acts unreasonably in running that risk. We do not expect the introduction of the exposure offence to have any impact on the way in which nudity in public is currently regulated by the police.

Similarly, the exposure offence will not affect models who are invited to pose naked for an art class because such models will not have the criminal state of mind in relation to causing others alarm or distress.

As for people in an art class who paint or draw nudes, the Bill will have no impact on them either as they will not be committing any offence. Although the Bill does introduce an offence of voyeurism at clause 71, for such observation to be an offence, it must be done for sexual gratification, while the other person is within a structure which would reasonably be expected to provide privacy and without that other person's consent. None of these factors will be present where an artist is openly painting a nude model who is posing for that artist.

Sikhs

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make it unlawful to require Sikhs to remove the kirpan when entering public places. [103035]

Beverley Hughes: There are no plans to introduce new legislation in this area. Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, which makes it an offence to have an article with blade or point in a public place, provides that should a person possess such an article for "religious reasons or as part of any national costume" he would not be guilty of an offence under the Act. This does not provide a licence for anyone to use kirpans for unlawful purposes and any person carrying such an article for the purpose of religious observance or national costume must be able to satisfy the police, and ultimately the courts, on this count.

Small Charities

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision will be made on whether to exempt small charities, with an annual income under £10,000 per annum, from current legislation with regard to charitable file status. [102407]

Beverley Hughes: The Strategy Unit's recent review of charity law and regulation ("Private Action, Public Benefit") included a proposal to change the registration rules for small charities.

The proposal would mean that no small charity with an annual income under £10,000 would be required or allowed to register with the Charity Commission. But the proposal would not take away any small charity's charitable status or its right to receive tax reliefs due to charities.

The Strategy Unit's review was put out for public consultation late last year. My officials are part way through the process of analysing responses to the consultation. Once that process is complete Ministers will consider whether or not to include the proposal on small charities registration in a draft Charities Bill. We are hoping to make an announcement in the summer.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the subject of exempting small charities from charitable status legislation; and how many were (a) for and (b) against. [102408]

Beverley Hughes: The Strategy Unit's recent review of charity law and regulation ("Private Action, Public Benefit") included a proposal to change the registration rules for small charities. The review was put out for open public consultation late last year.

There have been more than 1,100 written responses to the consultation. My officials are part way through the process of carefully analysing these responses. It will be possible accurately to judge the overall level of support or opposition to each proposal only when this process has been completed.

In accordance with the Cabinet Office's Code of Practice on written consultations the Government will in due course be publishing a summary of the views expressed by respondents on each proposal. We are hoping to make an announcement in the summer.

Special Branch

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 780W, whether the figure for Special Branch officers includes the Metropolitan Police Special Branch. [103833]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Yes.

Weapons

Annette Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many weapons were seized by authorities as they entered the UK in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002. [96905]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The requested information is not collected centrally by the Home Office. For the number of firearms seized by Customs and Excise in the last two financial years, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury gave my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) on 30 January 2003, Official Report, column 1002W.

Women Prisoners

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have taken place in the (a) numbers and (b) percentages of women sentenced to prison in each of the last 10 years. [102856]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is contained in the table.

Work Permits

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 309W, on work permits, what discussions Work Permits (UK) had with the Department of Employment and Learning in Northern Ireland on the application for a group work permit for lap dancers for the Movie Star Café in summer 2002; and if he will make a statement. [103641]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 18 March 2003]: Work Permits (UK) did not have any discussions with the Department of Education and Learning and were not consulted by the Department on the applications for a group work permit for lap dancers for the Movie Star Café.

HEALTH

NHS Foundation Trusts

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether (a) strategic health authorities and (b) primary care trusts will be able to guarantee the borrowing of NHS foundation trusts. [102581]

Mr. Hutton: The Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill makes no provision requiring the Secretary of State, strategic health authorities or primary care trusts to guarantee the borrowing of National Health Service foundation trusts. The regime we intend to put in place for managing financial failure will ensure that NHS patients continue to have access to the healthcare they need, free at the point of delivery. The regime will not underwrite institutions that have failed to deliver under the terms of their service agreements and/or licence.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether NHS foundation trusts will be able to use (a) regulated assets and (b) unregulated assets as security for their borrowing. [102582]

Mr. Hutton: Provisions in the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill will prevent National Health Service foundation trusts from using assets protected under the Bill as security for borrowing.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the prudential code setting out the basis for determining the serviceability of the debt levels requested by NHS foundation trusts will be placed in the public domain; and when the prudential code will be issued. [102583]

Mr. Hutton: Provision for making and issuing the prudential code is set out in the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill. Subject to parliamentary approval, the code will be published by the independent regulator and laid before Parliament during the application period for first wave National Health Service foundation trusts.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what limits the independent regulator may place on the borrowing of NHS foundation trusts. [102589]

Mr. Hutton: National Health Service foundation trusts will have complete freedom to access capital, subject to two principal constraints imposed on them by the independent regulator:

their prudential borrowing limit agreed with the independent regulator prohibition on use of protected assets as security for borrowing

The Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill sets out the proposed provisions for the independent regulator to place limits on the borrowing of NHS foundation trusts.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to relax the borrowing limits placed on NHS foundation trusts as the number of NHS foundation trusts increases. [102585]

Mr. Hutton: The Secretary of State will not have the power to set or relax the prudential borrowing limits. The regulator will set the prudential code in consultation with Secretary of State, every national health service trust making an application for NHS foundation trust status and other persons that the regulator deems appropriate. In making the code the regulator is to have regard, among other things, to any generally accepted principles used by financial institutions to determine the amounts of loans to non-profit making organisations.

The NHS foundation trust will submit an application for a prudential borrowing limit to the independent regulator, consistent with the prudential code. The regulator will then confirm that the limit applied for is consistent with the guidelines set out in the code.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the launch of NHS initiatives since May 1997 and the cost of each launch. [102088]

Mr. Lammy: The Department makes announcements on a regular basis about the development of Government policy. We do not cost each announcement separately because they are part of the Department's mainstream communications activity.

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of providing photodynamic therapy to (a) all patients for whom it is considered clinically appropriate who are suffering from classic wet age-related macular degeneration and (b) all patients for whom it is considered clinically appropriate who are suffering from either classic wet age-related macular degeneration or predominantly classic wet age-related macular degeneration; [103188]

(2) if he will make a statement on the time taken by NICE to carry out an appraisal of photodynamic therapy as a treatment for age-related macular degeneration; [103189]

(3) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Tim Loughton), of 27 February 2003, Official Report, columns 698–9W, on age-related macular degeneration, when his Department first asked NICE to carry out an appraisal of photodynamic therapy; and when he expects NICE to publish its final guidance. [103191]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 March 2003]: Photodynamic therapy was referred to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) on 12 March 2001. NICE has not yet published any guidance to the national health service on this topic. Appeals were lodged, in response to the final appraisal determination issued on 16 January, which were considered at an appeal hearing on 17 March. The final date of publication will depend on the outcome of the appeal hearing.

NICE is best placed to give authoritative guidance to the NHS, including guidance on the patients for whom the treatment may be appropriate. Until this guidance is available it is not possible to estimate what the cost of providing this treatment for clinically appropriate patients will be.

Once guidance has been published, NHS bodies are obliged to make the necessary funding available so that patients can receive treatments recommended by NICE, if recommended by the clinician.

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by the Department; what their scope was; when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102053]

Care Homes

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards are in place to ensure that residential homes which de-register from the National Care Standards Commission are adequately inspected by an independent body. [100680]

Jacqui Smith: If a home de-registers or is de-registered, the National Care Standards Commission would liaise with appropriate local authorities, such as social services, to ensure that the needs of the service users continued to be met and that any existing risk elements were removed. This could mean arranging for a new provider to take over the premises or helping gradually move the residents to other premises where their safety and well-being could be assured.

If the owners of former care homes subsequently operate as a domiciliary care agency by providing personal care to individuals, who then live in their own homes, the domiciliary care regulations would have to be complied with.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to increase residential care home provision in the London borough of Havering; [99747]

(2) if he will list the total amount spent on residential care home provision in the London borough of Havering in each year from 1990; and how much will be spent in 2003; [99746]

(3) if he will make a statement on residential care home provision in the London borough of Havering. [99748]

Jacqui Smith: The gross expenditure in Havering on residential services for all client groups is shown in the table.

£000

Year	Gross expenditure on residential services in the London borough of Havering
1993–94	10,628
1994–95	12,976
1995–96	14,679
1996–97	16,878
1997–98	18,976
1998–99	19,613
1999–2000	20,542
2000–01	23,005
2001–02	25,799

Figures prior to 1993–94 are not available.

There have been substantial increases in the level of funding provided for social services in recent years. Between 1996–97 and 2002–03, the overall level of funding for social services has increased by 20 per cent., an average real terms annual increase of around 3 per cent. As announced on 17 April 2002 by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, we intend to further increase resources to social services for personal social services by an annual average six per cent, in real terms from 2003–04 to 2005–06.

The London borough of Havering's personal social services standard spending assessment increased by 5.2 per cent., in 2002–03, compared to a national average increase of 4.9 per cent. The total building care capacity grant allocated to the borough in 2002–03 was £1,173,000. Of this total, £596,000 was spent on residential care.

In March 1997, there were 1,150 residential care home places in the London borough of Havering. The latest data for March 2001 show that figure has changed to 1,080 places, a decrease of 0.6 per cent.

I understand that the council has plans to increase the numbers of people placed in residential care by a total of 20 placements in the current financial year.

Childbirth

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) mothers and (b) babies were harmed in childbirth last year in hospital; and what action he is taking to reduce incidence of harm in childbirth. [100570]

Jacqui Smith: Information relating to harm to mothers and babies in hospital is not collected centrally by the Department. However, data on perinatal mortality, shown in the table, shows a continuing reduction in numbers and rate.

Perinatal deaths (stillbirths plus deaths at ages up to six completed days of life): England and Wales 1992–01

	Number	Rate per 1,000 total births
1992[1]	5,238	7.6
1993	6,044	9.0
1994	5,958	8.9
1995	5,701	8.7
1996	5,605	8.6
1997	5,380	8.3

1999	5,138	8.2
2000	4,956	8.2

Office of National Statistics

The Government has established the National Patient Safety Agency to improve the safety of National Health Service patient care by promoting an open and fair culture and by introducing a national reporting and learning system for adverse events, including those involving mothers and their babies. The system will be rolled out across the NHS from summer 2003.

The Confidential Enquiry into Maternal Deaths (CEMD), established in 1952, collects data and analyses data on all maternal deaths in the United Kingdom. This covers deaths of women while pregnant or within 42 days of delivery, miscarriage or termination of pregnancy from any cause related to or aggravated by the pregnancy or its management. The last report covering 1997–1999 was published in December 2001 and is available at www.cemd.orq.uk

The Confidential Enquiry into Stillbirths and Deaths in Infancy (CESDI) was established in 1992 with the aim of collecting and analysing data on deaths in late foetal life (involving foetuses at more than 20 weeks' gestation) and infancy (children up to one year) and to use the findings to reduce the risk of such deaths. The report covers England, Wales and Northern Ireland. Scotland has its own confidential enquiry.

The findings of both CEMD and CESDI are important to both individuals and professional bodies. The messages are wide ranging and applicable to the entire spectrum of health workers, ranging from doctors, midwives, nurses and health visitors to coroners, and at times findings are particularly relevant to parents. All the professions represented on the CEMD & CESDI enquiries are signed up to implement its recommendations.

In addition, the Department's programme of work to reduce harm to mother and baby during childbirth, includes:

Issuing clinical guidelines through the National Institute for Clinical Excellence. Guidelines have been published on the use of electronic foetal monitoring, induction of labour and routine use of Anti-D prophylaxis for rhesus negative pregnant women.

Further guidelines are due later this year on antenatal care, including antenatal screening, and the use of caesarean sections. We have also recently commissioned guidelines on intrapartum care (delivery), and post natal care.

Developing a children's national service framework, including maternity services, to set national standards of care for antenatal, intrapartum and postnatal services.

Correspondence

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Broxbourne will receive a reply to her letters of 20 November 2002, 2 January, 6 February and 13 March relating to her constituent Mrs. Mary Jaggs of Hoddesdon. [103737]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 March 2003]: The issues raised in the hon. Member's correspondence are the responsibility of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. I understand that a reply was sent on 4 December 2002.

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for Broxbourne will receive a reply to her letters of 20 November 2002, 2 January, 6 February and 1 March relating to her constituent Mrs. Margaret Jewell of Hoddesdon. [103738]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 18 March 2003]: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 17 March.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 10 February from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs.Sally Burns. [103742]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 17 March.

External Consultants

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the projects with a value in excess of £30,000 carried out by his Department using external consultants in the current financial year. [96697]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 11 February 2003]: Responsibility for procurement within the Department is devolved to individual business units operating within central guidance. Information is not held centrally on a project by project basis but a trawl of the Department, excluding agencies, at local business unit level has identified 10 projects in the current financial year with an expenditure to date on consultants in excess of £30,000:

Business process re-engineering/Departmental of Health finance system

Department of Health performance management

Ensuring efficient delivery

Financial flows project

Benchmarking programme

Mental health minimum dataset

Infrastructure management services programme

Establishment of the NHS franchising register of expertise

Utilisation—based small area study of need for healthcare in England

Shifting the balance of power.

Eye Tests

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free eye tests were given to (a) pensioners and (b) other people in (i) York and (ii) England in each year since 1997. [102692]

Mr. Lammy: The table shows the number of National Health Service sight tests paid for in north Yorkshire Health Authority (HA) and England for the years ending 31 March 1998 to 2002.

Information for the years since 1997 is collected at HA level. York falls under north Yorkshire HA.

Data is collected by eligibility group and not age. Hence, the closest match to pensioners is the eligibility group of those aged 60 and over.

Information on the number of people having NHS sight tests is not collected centrally. The number of sight tests can not be equated with the number of people as some groups areadvised to have more than one sight test in a year.

General Ophthalmic services: number of sight tests paid for by North Yorkshire HA and England for all patients and patients aged 60 and over for years ending 31 March 1998 to 2002

Thousands

	North Yorkshire HA		England
	Number of sight tests for aged 60 and over	Total number of sight tests	Number of sight tests for aged 60 and over	Total number of sight tests
1997–98		83		6,991
1998–99		82		6,992
1999–2000	52	125	3,301	9,399
2000–01	62	127	3,753	9,567
2001–02	69	133	4,013	9,807

Note:

Eligibility for NHS sight tests was extended to patients aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999.

General Practice

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 885W, on the GP Patient Survey, whether a national report will be published on the results of the survey. [102893]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 17 March 2003]: There are no plans to publish a national report. Results have been disseminated on a strategic health authority (StHA) basis, allowing the cross-comparison of primary care trusts' results for local benchmarking purposes. This approach enables StHAs to maintain an overview of how results are formulated into local follow-up plans.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the existing duty of GPs in paragraph 43 of the terms of service to prescribe on the basis of patient need will be included in the new terms of service; [102912]

(2) what changes are proposed in the duty of GPs in the NHS to treat patients on the basis of clinical need in the proposed new contract; [102913]

(3) whether GPs will be required in their new contracts to take resources into account when recommending and prescribing treatments. [102914]

Mr. Hutton: Under the current general medical services (GMS) and personal medical services (PMS) contracts and under the proposed new GMS contract the fundamental principle that patients receive all of their national health service care and treatment—including prescribing and referral for specialist investigations—strictly according to their clinical needs applies.

The proposed new contract for GMS will, if accepted by the profession, ensure that general practitioners will be rewarded for the quality of services they provide: not just the number of patients they treat.

Hospices

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to provide funding for hospices. [100357]

Ms Blears: In the NHS Cancer Plan, published in September 2000, we pledged that the national health service contribution to the costs of specialist palliative care, including hospices, would increase by £50 million by 2004.

To enable faster progress towards this commitment we have made available an extra £10 million from central budgets for specialist palliative care for 2002–03. We have also set up a central budget of £50 million per annum exclusively for specialist palliative care, for three years from 2003–04. Local plans are being developed by cancer networks around the country to determine on the appropriate deployment of those resources to support services according to local needs. This represents a significant increase nearly 40 per cent. in the NHS funding of specialist palliative care services. The £50 million is for specialist palliative care services in their entirety and not for voluntary hospices alone, though, as they play an essential role and provide two thirds of all specialist palliative care, it is reasonable to expect they will get a fair slice of this extra money. Further information is available on the Department's website at: www.info.doh.gov.uk/cancer/palliative 03 06.htm.

In-patient Survey

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 887W, on the in-patient survey, whether a national report will be published on the results of the in-patient survey. [102894]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 17 March 2003]: There are no plans to publish a national report. Rather, results are being disseminated on a strategic health authority (StHA) basis, allowing the cross-comparison of trusts' results for local benchmarking purposes. This approach enables StHAs to maintain an overview of how results are formulated into local follow-up plans.

Internal Telephone Directory

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the most recent internal telephone directory for the Department was published; how often it is updated; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [102030]

Mr. Lammy: The Department's internal directory is maintained as a live database available to all staff and is constantly being updated. It is too detailed to be published in full but information on the Department's structure, organisation and responsibilities, with contact details where appropriate, is available on our website.

As part of ongoing improvements to our website, this information is regularly reviewed and updated. Extracts are published in commercial directories, such as the Civil Service Yearbook, the Whitehall Companion and Health and Social Services Yearbook. The full directory is only available in online format, so a copy cannot be placed in the Library without incurring disproportionate cost.

Long-term Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to implement the recommendations in the health service Ombudsman's report 'NHS funding for long term care'; and if he will make a statement. [103151]

Jacqui Smith: We have asked strategic health authorities to report back to their Directorate of Health and Social Care by 28 March with details of:

> Whether continuing care criteria in use since 1996 were consistent with the Coughlan judgment;
> If criteria were not consistent with the Coughlan judgment, when was this identified and what action was taken;
> An estimate of the number of people who may have been wrongly assessed under criteria not consistent with the Coughlan judgment.

We have announced our intention to amend the regulations to be made under the Community Care (Delayed Discharges etc) Bill to ensure that assessments for fully funded continuing national health service health care are carried out before discharge from hospital. This will ensure that nobody is issued with a section 2 notice (notice from the NHS to say that a patient requires social services) before an assessment for continuing NHS health care, informed by the single assessment process, has been carried out.

We have written to the Commission for Health Improvement and asked that continuing care is included within the inspection of the national service framework for older people, due to begin in 2004.

Meetings

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether it is his policy to allow (a) the Children's Tsar and (b) the Chief Inspector of the Social Services Inspectorate to attend meetings with (i) individual hon. Members of Parliament, (ii) parliamentary groups, (iii) lobby groups and (iv) commercial companies. [100663]

Mr. Lammy: All meetings are conducted in accordance with the requirements of the Civil Service Code and guidance set out in the Directory of Civil Service Guidance, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list internal flights made by Ministers in his Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (iii) economy class. [103587]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the response that was given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Douglas Alexander), on Wednesday 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

NHS (International Recruitment)

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has a list of countries from which it regards it as acceptable actively to recruit healthcare professionals. [103086]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 March 2003]: The Department has worked together with the Department for International Development to produce a definitive list of developing countries and countries that should not be recruited from. This list is available on the Department of Health website at www.doh.qov.uk/international-recruitment/emplovercode.htm

NHS Dentists

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) adults and (b) children are registered with an NHS dentist in England; and what the figures were in May 1997. [103731]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 March 2003]: On 31 January 2003, 43.9 per cent. of adults and 60.1 per cent. of children were registered with a general dental service (CDS) dentist in England. At 31 May 1997, 51.9 per cent. of adults and 62.2 per cent. of children were registered.

The registration rates at 31 January 2003 and at 31 May 1997 are not directly comparable due to changes in the registration period that affected registration numbers from November 1997.

Registrations now lapse if the patient does not return to their dentists within 15 months of their last appointment. Registration rates therefore exclude patients who have not been to their CDS dentist within the past 15 months and unregistered patients who receive dental treatment from other National Health Service dental arrangements, such as occasional treatment.

NHS Direct (Adverse Drug Reactions)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many calls NHS Direct has received from callers reporting adverse drug reactions since 1 January. [102525]

Mr. Lammy: NHS Direct has not received any calls from patients reporting adverse drug reactions. A pilot scheme for handling calls from callers reporting adverse drug reaction will be launched at NHS Direct South East London on 18 March. Following an initial review period, national roll-out will be completed by the end of this year.

NHS Litigation Authority

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of procedures put in place by the NHS Litigation Authority to identify clinicians against whom there have been several complaints. [103565]

Mr. Lammy: The National Health Service Litigation Authority (NHSLA) is not part of the complaints system in place in individual trusts. The NHSLA's function is to administer the clinical negligence schemes, i.e., the Existing Liabilities Scheme and the Clinical Negligence Scheme for trusts, as well as two non-clinical schemes. Since claims under these schemes are against the NHS bodies which are vicariously liable for the actions of their employees, it is not considered necessary to record the name of the clinician when a claim is notified.

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he receives from the NHS litigation authority on clinicians against whom complaints have been made. [103566]

Mr. Lammy: The National Health Service Litigation Authority does not collect information on complaints about clinicians.

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to whom the NHS litigation authority makes information available on the litigation history of individual clinicians. [103567]

Mr. Lammy: The National Health Service Litigation Authority (NHSLA) does not collect information on the litigation history of a clinician. The NHSLA shares its claims information with the National Patient Safety Agency, whose role it is to collate information on all incidents that occur in NHS trusts. Only in cases of a novel, contentious or repercussive nature is the NHSLA required to advise the Department of Health.

Patient Advocacy

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the recommendations of the Transitional Advisory Board regarding the abolition of Community Health Councils and the introduction of patients' forums and independent complaints advisory services. [102828]

Mr. Lammy: The Chief Nursing Officer replied for the Government to the Transition Advisory Board's recommendations on 31 January. A copy of this response is available at www.doh.gov.uk/involvinqpatients/tab

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether TUPE—Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations—will apply to Community Health Council staff in relation to patients' forums and independent complaints advisory services. [102829]

Mr. Lammy: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health, having given careful consideration to the legal position of staff assigned to Community Health Councils, has decided that there will be no Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE) transfer of CHC staff in relation to The Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health, the support to patients' forums and the Independent Complaints and Advocacy Services.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he plans to take to eradicate variation in the quality of services under the new arrangements for patient advocacy following the abolition of Community Health Councils; [102831]

(2) what arrangements he has made to ensure the continuity of patient advocacy and a smooth transition to the new arrangements after the abolition of Community Health Councils; [102833]

(3) what steps his Department has taken to evaluate pilot independent complaints advisory services; and if he will make a statement. [102830]

Mr. Lammy: It is our intention that Independent Complaints Advocacy Services (ICAS) will be available throughout the country from 1 September 2003.

In the new system of patient and public involvement, ICAS is the responsibility of primary care trust (PCT) patients' forums. As an interim measure, whilst patients' forums are being established and are building their capacity and networks, we shall be working with the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health (CPPIH) to put in place national coverage of ICAS through a contract with specialist complaints support providers.

To support this system, we shall make arrangements to enable the CPPIH to manage the contract and to ensure services are provided to national standards.

I recently announced an extension to the ICAS pilots to 31 July 2003. The full evaluation of the pilots will take place at the end of June, when we will have three quarterly returns from the pilots on the experience and activity. The evaluation will include all the pilots plus the support offered to them.

The initial benchmarking exercise of a sample of the pilots, undertaken in January this year, has shown that ICAS provision has been well received and that pilots need to focus on developing good working relationships with the local national health service, in particular patient advice and liaison services, work with patients to find out their views of the ICAS service and ways of collecting data which can be used to improve NHS services.

The CPPIH has a specific remit to set national standards for ICAS and to monitor compliance. The ICAS pilots currently work to draft national standards and are developing local operational protocols, which will inform future provision.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that the expertise and knowledge of Community Health Council staff are not lost in the new arrangements for patients' forums and independent complaints advisory services. [102832]

Mr. Lammy: We have never envisaged that we could guarantee employment for Community Health Council (CHC) staff in the new system of patient and public involvement or that we would treat CHC staff differently from the way we deal with other national health service staff when they are affected by restructuring—the human resources framework for CHC staff makes this clear. This framework was developed jointly with the employers and NHS unions and will provide help and support to CHC staff to seek alternative employment in the NHS.

However, jobs in the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health will be advertised to CHC staff first and those staff who meet the essential criteria for posts will be guaranteed interviews.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health commissioners have undertaken on patients' forums and the independent complaints advisory services; and what discussions they have had with the Association of Community Health Councils in England and Wales. [102834]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not maintain records of discussions held by the individual commissioners of the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health (CPPIH) and because of this the information requested is not available. More information about the CPPIH and the commissioners is available from its website at www.cppih.org

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be responsible for taking up the cases of those patients that remain unresolved by the Community Health Councils on 1 September 2003. [102835]

Mr. Lammy: We are currently working on guidance for the handling of any patients' cases that remain unresolved in Community Health Councils when they are abolished on 1 September 2003.

Pharmacies

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of NHS pharmacies required to provide NHS services to local communities; how many pharmacies dispense on behalf of the NHS; and what assessment he has made of the optimum location of these pharmacies in future. [103455]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 17 March 2003]: Under the National Health Service Act 1977, it is the responsibility of national health service primary care trusts (PCTs) to arrange the provision of pharmaceutical services in their area. This includes determining whether it is necessary or desirable to secure adequate provision of services by granting new applications. The Health and Social Care Act 2001 also empowers PCTs to devise contracts for local pharmaceutical services which address particular local needs.

We remain committed to maintaining and improving access to pharmaceutical services. We are currently considering the recommendation of the Director General of Fair Trading to remove these statutory controls and any implications it may have for this objective.

As at March 2002, there were 9,756 community pharmacies in England in contract with the NHS to dispense prescriptions.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive Department of Health on the Office of Fair Trading report on the regulation of pharmacies. [103286]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 17 March 2003]: We are in regular contact with the Scottish Executive in considering the report from the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, is co-ordinating the Government's response.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the Office of Fair Trading report on control of entry regulations to the pharmacy market on his Department's strategy on the reclassification of medicines from prescription-only to pharmacy sale. [103463]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 18 March 2003]: We are considering the report from the Director General of Fair Trading and its findings and recommendation carefully, including any implications it may have for the procedures we introduced in May 2002 to streamline the medicines reclassification system.

The Government continues to encourage pharmaceutical companies to apply for their products to be reclassified where it is safe and appropriate to do so.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the Office of Fair Trading report on control of entry regulations to the pharmacy market on his Department's strategy on the reclassification of medicines from prescription only to pharmacy sale; [102851]

(2) what assessment he has made of (a) the number of pharmacies required to provide NHS services to local communities and (b) the optimum location for these pharmacies. [102853]

Mr. Lammy: We are considering the report from the Director General of Fair Trading and its findings and recommendation carefully.

This includes any implications it may have for the procedures we introduced in May 2002 to streamline the medicines reclassification system. The Government continues to encourage pharmaceutical companies to apply for their products to be reclassified where it is safe and appropriate to do so.

The Government remains committed to maintaining and improving access to pharmaceutical services. Under the National Health Service Act 1977, it is the responsibility of NHS primary care trusts (PCTs) to arrange the provision of pharmaceutical services in their area. This includes determining whether it is necessary or desirable to secure adequate provision of services by granting new applications. The Health and Social Care Act 2001 also empowers PCTs to devise contracts for local pharmaceutical services which address particular local needs.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many responses he has received to the OFT report on the UK market for retail pharmacy services; [103183]

(2) what steps he is taking to safeguard access to pharmacy services for (a) elderly people, (b) people with disabilities and (c) those reliant on public transport; [103185]

(3) what discussions he has had with pensioners' representatives on retail pharmacy services. [103184]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 17 March 2003]: We have received around 1,000 responses so far to the Director General of Fair Trading's report on community pharmacies.

I have had no recent specific discussions with representatives of pensioners about retail pharmacy services. However, I and my officials have met patient and consumer interests as well as leading pharmacy and medical organisations to hear their views on the report. These have included views on the implications of the report's recommendation for continued access to pharmacy services for older people and those with special needs. The Government remains fully committed to maintaining and improving access to national health service pharmacy services for all.

Prison Employees

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS employees work in prisons. [103382]

Jacqui Smith: A survey carried out in January 2003 identified 3,513 staff as providing healthcare in prisons. Of these, 1,953 were employed by the prison service. Information is not collected centrally about how many of the rest were National Health Service employees.

Social Workers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to issue an international code of conduct for the recruitment of overseas social worker staff. [100144]

Jacqui Smith: It is the responsibility of individual employers to ensure that their recruitment policies and procedures comply with current legislation whether recruiting within England or abroad.

Employers of qualified social workers from abroad can verify the qualifications of applicants within the General Social Care Council (GSCC). This is an advisory service to employers on the standing of international qualifications. They will also issue a letter of verifications for foreign qualifications to those social workers from abroad who choose to apply for it. This confirms the professional status of the qualification held in the country of origin.

The GSCC has also issued codes of practice for social care workers and employers which apply to all social care staff across the United Kingdom, irrespective of from where they are recruited. Appliance with these codes is taken into account when enforcing care standards.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for which benefits the threshold payment of compensation for delays in processing the benefit is less than eight months' delay. [97909]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is as follows.

Attendance Allowance (Special Rules)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in how many cases, in each year since 1997, compensation for delay in processing benefit in respect of retirement pension has been paid; what percentage such costs represent of total applications for retirement pension in each year; and what average level of compensation has been paid in each case. [97910]

Mr. McCartney: The information is in the table.

1. Figures for retirement pension claims have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. The final totals for 2002–03 are not, as yet, available.

Child Benefit Cancellation

Andy King: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations the Department has received from the Learning and Skills Council about the cancellation of a mother's child benefit due to receipt of a £40 per week grant through the modern apprenticeship scheme. [100614]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department receives many representations on a variety of issues.

For young people between the ages of 16 and 18, Child Benefit is payable if they are in full-time, non advanced education, and for a short defined period after they leave such education. Child Benefit is not payable for those who start work or work-based training.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in how many cases parents with care not on income support have voluntarily discontinued using the services of CSA to collect child maintenance in each of the last 12 months. [100812]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Steve Webb, dated March 2003:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, in replying to you recent parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You ask in how many cases parents with care not on income support have voluntarily discontinued using the services of Child Support Agency to collect child maintancance in each of the last 12 months.

We do not collect this information and I regret that I do not feel that it can be safely deduced from other information that we do collect.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) in what circumstances disability living allowance is currently payable to persons who go abroad; and if he plans to review this; [101724]

(2) which benefits are available to eligible disabled students pursuing their studies (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) within the European Economic Area and (c) elsewhere on the basis that (i) the course of study is centred on a UK institution and (ii) the period abroad is either a requirement of the course or a recommendation of course tutors. [101916]

Maria Eagle: Under domestic law, people who are ordinarily resident in Great Britain can receive disability living allowance (DLA) during the first 26 weeks of a period of temporary absence abroad. This period can be extended where someone is abroad specifically to receive treatment for an illness or disability. Members of HM forces serving abroad and their families, mariners and airmen working abroad, and people working on the UK sector of the continental shelf may also receive these benefits.

People who spend longer than 26 weeks abroad can receive DLA immediately upon their return providing the total period of temporary absence does not exceed 52 weeks. A longer absence will defer entitlement by a corresponding number of weeks, for example, a person who returns after 54 weeks can be paid after two weeks of residence and, after 78 weeks of temporary absence, a person will need to spend 26 weeks in Great Britain before payment can recommence.

Under European Community law, workers and members of their families who were entitled to DLA before 1 June 1992 can continue to receive it if, before that date, they left the UK and took up permanent residence in another member state of the European Union (EU). The law changed at that date, with transitional provision made for such cases. The provisions are treated as also covering workers and members of their families who move to another member state after 1 June 1992 provided their entitlement to the benefit started before that date. Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway, Gibraltar and Switzerland are treated like EU member states for social security purposes.

Disabled students can receive DLA on the same basis as other severely disabled people. The 26 weeks temporary absence rule means that those who study in another country, whether or not an EU member state, can receive payment continuously if they return to Great Britain during the vacations.

Students pursuing their studies in Great Britain may also receive incapacity benefit (IB). In addition, those who are entitled to a disability premium or severe disability premium in the assessment of income support (IS), housing benefit (HB) and council tax benefit (CTB) are eligible for IS, HB and CTB while studying full-time in Great Britain.

The domestic law on temporary absence abroad which applies to contribution-based IB and non-contributory IB (which replaced severe disablement allowance for young people from April 2001) reflects the rules for DLA, subject to certain conditions. The recipient must have been incapable of work for six months or receiving treatment for their incapacity or have an incapacity which resulted from an industrial injury. Payment of IB can continue beyond the first 26 weeks if the person also gets DLA (or attendance allowance, which is available to severely disabled people aged 65 or over).

Under European community law, IB based on National Insurance contributions can usually be paid to people resident in an EU member state. It can also be paid in countries with which the UK has a reciprocal social security agreement. Any further provisions for the payment of IB depend on the terms of the individual agreements.

IS is payable for up to four weeks of absence abroad. Payment is made when the recipient returns. Any person who is temporarily away from home may receive HB and CTB for up to 13 weeks provided they intend to return during that period and their home is not let or sub-let during their absence.

We have no plans to review these arrangements. Information about Northern Ireland is a matter for the Northern Ireland Office.

Departmental Electricity Charges

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what changes in unit payments for electricity have resulted from the switch by his Department to purchasing renewable energy which is exempt from the climate change levy. [96486]

Maria Eagle: The Department for Work and Pensions currently has 17.5 per cent. of its total electricity requirements supplied from renewable sources that are exempt from the climate change levy. There has been no increase in the unit payment for this renewable energy over the price of brown supplies, including the climate change levy.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the level of (a) fraud by and (b) overpayments to landlords in respect of housing benefit in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what action his Department is taking to reduce such fraud and overpayments. [102732]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested. The 1997–98 National Housing Benefit Accuracy Review estimated that the landlord fraud which could be established by the review cost £30 million. We are now running an ongoing Housing Benefit Review which will provide new estimates for landlord fraud.

Later this year, as part of our reforms to improve the administration of housing benefit, standard rate housing allowance will start to be piloted in 10 pathfinder offices. Paying the allowance direct to claimants will eliminate some opportunities for fraud by landlords. A detailed evaluation will take place once the pathfinders are complete.

IT Projects

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list each information technology project being undertaken by his Department and its agencies including (a) the start date, (b) the planned completion date, (c) the current expected completion date, (d) the planned cost and (e) the current estimated cost; and if he will make a statement. [98224]

Mr. McCartney: The Department is undertaking a major modernisation programme, encompassing both organisational and IT reform. We received £2 billion for the modernisation programme in SR2000, and a further £1.9 billion in SR2002. The programme began in 2001 and is currently funded until March 2006. Current planned costs include spend to date and estimate to project completion, and are set out by client group in the following below:

£ million

Work programme	Allocation
Working age	375
Pensions	830
Children	585
Corporate	1,433

Figures include all modernisation projects with an IT element, although they do not include running costs or the costs of rolling out the Pension Service and Jobcentre Plus.

Estimates are subject to change as projects move through the project lifecycle.

Invalid Care Allowances

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people in each of the last three years have been overpaid in respect of invalid care allowance where the overlapping benefit rule applied; and what the total amount overpaid in this respect was in each year; [101947]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of removing the overlapping benefit rule in respect of invalid care allowance and (b) the number of beneficiaries. [101948]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 13 March 2003]: Information about the number of overpayments of invalid care allowance due to the operation of the overlapping benefit rules is not available.

Exempting invalid care allowance from the overlapping benefit rules would run counter to the basic principle that the social security scheme should avoid making duplicate provision from public funds for the same contingency by paying more than one income-maintenance benefit at the same time. The estimated gross cost would be around £320 million[1] a year[2], affecting some 160,000 recipients. After adjusting for offsets in the income-related benefits[3], the estimated net cost would be about £190 million[1] a year.

[1] Figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million and assume no increase in ICA take up

[2] Gross costs calculated from data taken from a 100 per cent extract of ICA records in September 2002. The costs include an allowance for underlying entitlement cases not currently on the ICA computer system.

[3] Income support offsets calculated from a 5 per cent extract of records in September 2002. housing benefit/council tax benefit offsets calculated from a 1 per cent sample of records in May 2001

Pension Schemes

James Purnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pension schemes the Pensions Schemes Registry recorded as (a) having started wind-up proceedings and (b) completing wind-up proceedings in each year from 1979 to 2002; and how many members were covered by the schemes in each case. [102592]

Mr. McCartney: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), on 11 February 2003, Official Report, columns 687–688W.

In 1997, the regulations that governed which schemes had a levy liability changed. Robust information for the period prior to 1 April 1997 is not available from the Registry.

Pensioners (North-East Derbyshire)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners there are in North East Derbyshire; how many qualify for a free television licence; and how many get the minimum income guarantee. [103577]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available for the North East Derbyshire constituency shows that the number of people in receipt of state pension as at 30 September 2002 was 18,300. As at 31 May 2002 there were 7,700 people in receipt of a key benefit aged over 75 and therefore eligible for free TV licences. There were 3,100 people receiving the minimum income guarantee as at November 2002.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Asylum Courts

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when (a) Newport asylum court and (b) Stoke asylum court were completed; when each concluded its first case; and if he will make a statement. [102514]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Neither Hearing Centre has been used for hearings. Newport was ready to commence hearings on 2 December 2002. However, planning consent for change of use was refused before that date. The Immigration Appellate Authority has subsequently appealed against that decision and this is being dealt with by public inquiry.

Stoke was ready to commence hearings on 9 December 2002. However, planning consent for change of use was refused before that date. The Immigration Appellate Authority has been successful in its appeal against that decision and hearings are due to commence by 7 April 2003.

Departmental Studies

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what studies have been undertaken of the options for (a) commercialising the Public Records Office and (b) rationalising the offices of the Land Registry; and if she will make a statement. [102873]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Public Record Office (PRO) was subject to a Quinquennial Review in 1997–98, which concluded that its core functions in relation to its oversight of records management in other government departments and its custody of historical public records can only be carried out from within government. The PRO established a commercial arm, PRO Enterprises, eight years ago. Since the ways in which revenue is raised via the commercial exploitation of the Office's holdings and sites have expanded steadily.

Income is raised through a flourishing retailing operation, (two shops and an internet bookshop); a successful publishing house; and an image library which provides expert services in supplying images to commercial customers including publishers and broadcasters. We are also developing a range of licensing projects based on the commercial use of PRO-held images. Revenue is generated through arrangements with licensees from the worlds of social stationery, gift merchandise, homewares and ceramics and also through concluding licences with on-line content providers for the commercial use of PRO images of interest to the genealogical and academic communities.

Income has grown from £642,646 in 1998–99 to a projected £900,000 in 2002–03. Revenue raised via commercial activities can be retained to fund Office-wide projects.

The Report of the latest Quinquennial Review of the Land Registry (published in June 2001) recommended that the Registry should plan to retain the present regional office structure, without major change, for the foreseeable future. The Report considered that the Registry's District network of offices had been a considerable success, the tangible benefits being staff units of an optimal size; the ability to recruit more able staff; improvements in performance through benchmarking throughout the network; and convenient units for piloting new processes.

Most of the Registry's work takes place in 24 District Land Registries and other units located outside London. The Land Registry's policy is to provide and maintain sufficient good quality accommodation with first class working environments to enable business operations to be carried out efficiently and effectively.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much money has been lost by his Department and its agencies and non-departmental public bodies through (a) fraud and (b) theft for each year since 1996–97. [92433]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Figures are only available up to the end of Financial Year 2001–02. Actual losses from theft and fraud since 1996–97 were as follows:

	Department and Agencies	NDPBs
1996–97	29,474.37	—
1997–98	21,721.52	—
1998–99	68,714.02	—

2000–01	8,338.16	—
2001–02	48,801.47	13,137

Figures have been adjusted to reflect recoveries received in subsequent financial years. These figures do not include those for the Legal Services Commission about which I will be writing to the hon. Member separately, copies of which will be placed in the libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what her estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in 2002. [89894]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Figures are only available up to the end of Financial Year 2001–02. Actual losses from Theft and Fraud in 2001–02 were as follows:

Department	8,367.00
Agencies	40,434.47
NDPBs	13,137.00

These figures do not include those for the Legal Services Commission about which I will be writing separately.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 20 March 2003

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

International Women's Day

23. Michael Fabricant: To ask the Minister for Women if she will make a statement on her Department's contribution to International Women's Day. [103903]

Ms Hewitt: As part of the celebrations for International Women's Day, the Women and Equality Unit launched an excellent pack for young people—"Does Sex Make a Difference", and I opened the International Women's Day adjournment debate in the House of Commons, and launched a special 50p coin to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the formation of the Women's Social and Political Union.

Student Debt

24. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Minister for Women what consultations the Minister has had with the Minister for Lifelong Learning and Higher Education regarding the different level of difficulty men and women have in repaying student debts. [103904]

Ms Hewitt: I have discussed with both my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills and my hon. Friend the Minister for Lifelong Learning and Higher Education the issue of student debt, and its impact on women in particular.

Child Care

26. Linda Gilroy: To ask the Minister for Women what steps she is taking to support the development of child care as a business. [103906]

Ms Hewitt: Child care businesses, particularly micro-businesses and social enterprises, need support and skills training in order to be sustainable. We are working with DfES and DWP to improve links and support between Business Link Operators and child care business support officers to this end. A specific targeted programme of support, including provision of good practice, workshops, resource packs, a helpline and a website, is scheduled to start in May and run until March 2004.

Private Members' Clubs

27. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister for Women what plans she has to propose legislation against sex discrimination against women in private members' clubs. [103907]

Ms Hewitt: I welcome the Sex Discrimination (Clubs and Other Associations) Bill, introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Dhanda) on 4 February 2003. There is no question that the inequalities which persist in some mixed-sex clubs are out of date and contrary to this Government's principles of opportunity for all.

While I can make no commitment on parliamentary time, this is a matter which we will keep under review.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Businesses

11. Ms Julia Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to ensure that small businesses are encouraged to bid for public sector contracts. [103890]

Nigel Griffiths: Small firms make a vital contribution to the public sector. A survey of selected departments and agencies shows 50 per cent. of our contracts go to SMEs with a value of £730 million.

We have cut the requirement to provide three years accounts, to two years and I now want the requirement abolished to encourage start-ups and fledgling businesses.

And this new booklet "Smaller supplier—better value" supports our new web portal for small firms seeking Government contracts.

But there is much much more we can and must do.

Fireworks

12. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations she has received expressing a desire for stricter legislation on the use of fireworks. [103892]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Since the beginning of November 2002 I have received 2,078 representations indicating a desire to see tighter controls on fireworks. These comprise 1,588 letters from the general public, 476 letters from MPs, eight Petitions, and six meetings with representatives from various organisations interested in improving fireworks legislation.

Agency Workers Directive

13. Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received from businesses on the proposed temporary agency workers directive. [103893]

Alan Johnson: The Government held a public consultation on the proposed directive from 10 July 2002 to 18 November 2002. A summary of responses to the public consultation has been placed in the Library of the house, along with an Explanatory Memorandum and a Regulatory Impact Assessment.

World Trade

14. Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on current negotiations regarding TRIPS. [103894]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are disappointed that the WTO did not reach agreement on TRIPS and Public Health by the deadline of December last year.

The US was the only member of the WTO who could not accept the proposal on the table.

We will continue to work with all WTO members to resolve this issue as soon as possible.

18. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to achieve a world trade agreement in the interests of developing countries. [103898]

Ms Hewitt: We are committed to ensuring that the Doha Development Agenda delivers substantial benefits to all WTO members, especially developing countries.

In particular this means making substantial progress on agricultural liberalisation, TRIPS and Public Health and Special and Differential Treatment.

Halving protectionism, according to EU figures, would increase developing countries income by an estimated $150 billion per year—more than three times the world's current aid budgets.

Post Office

15. Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the implementation of the Post Office Urban Re-Invention Programme. [103895]

Mr. Timms: Following parliamentary approval in October, the programme is going ahead in accordance with the code of practice agreed with Postwatch. I met with Postwatch yesterday to assess their role in reviewing each urban sub-post office closure proposal.

Community Pharmacies

16. Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received relating to the Office of Fair Trading recommendations regarding community pharmacies. [103896]

Ms Hewitt: Stakeholders have been feeding [illegible] their views on the OFT's report, both through the appropriate health departments and to DTI directly.

Iraq

17. Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to ensure that British industry plays a substantial role in reconstruction following a possible conflict in Iraq. [103897]

Ms Hewitt: We wish to see UK companies play a substantial role in the humanitarian and reconstruction process in Iraq. British firms have a wealth of experience in the Middle East. We have made this clear to USAID and will continue to discuss with British business how they can best contribute to the development of Iraq for the benefit of the Iraqi people.

Child Care

19. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to increase child care provision by employers. [103899]

Alan Johnson: We recognise that employers play an important role in providing access to good quality, affordable child care. The Paymaster General launched a consultation in February on proposals to extend the tax and national insurance exemptions on employer supported child care. The tax and national insurance proposals aim to provide a better incentive for more employers to support a wider range of formal child care for all working parents, helping the growth and sustainability of child care provision.

In addition we will be looking at the results of the Work-Life Balance survey of employers to see what other support is needed to provide more child care provision by employers.

Ambition Construction Programme

Matthew Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to his answer of 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 808W, on house building, how many new deal clients have been (a) funded and (b) trained by the Ambition Construction programme in skilled jobs directly relevant to the house building profession in (i) 2001, (ii) 2002 and (iii) 2003 to the latest date for which figures are available. [102659]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

In 2001, we launched the Ambition initiative to help unemployed and disadvantaged people gain the right skills to meet the needs of employers in key sectors such as construction.

Ambition: Construction has been operational since June 2002 with pilots currently running in six locations. Training is provided across the full range of building skills, including bricklaying, roofing, plastering, joinery, glazing and painting and decorating. The aim of this training is to provide participants with the skills they need for a wide variety of jobs in the construction industry, including house building.

By the end of February 2003, 420 people had started training on the programme. Most of the training courses on this programme last 26 weeks and so only 64 people have so far completed training. However, 54 of these have already started work.

Correspondence

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Worcestershire of 15 July 2002 on behalf of Mr. Roger Turner. [103974]

Ms Hewitt: I apologise for the delay but I am informed that my noble Friend the Minister for Trade, will be replying very shortly.

Departmental Phone Directory

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the most recent internal phone directory for the Department was published; how often it is updated; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [101786]

Ms Hewitt: The internal phone directory for my Department is published electronically in the form of an online database known as people@dti. Keeping their contact details up to date is the responsibility of individual members of staff who make changes through the Department's Human Resources system. Such changes update the directory overnight.

My Department is in the process of developing an offline version of the directory for those in government who do not have access to the online version. When this is available, and staff have been informed in accordance with the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1998, I will place a copy in the Library of the House.

Details of our senior staff are, however, available in publications such as the Civil Service Yearbook, Vacher's Parliamentary Companion, Vacher Dod's Civil Service Companion and the PMS Parliamentary Companion.

Hydroelectricity

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to facilitate imports from Norway of renewable electricity generated by hydro-power. [99199]

Mr. Wilson: I understand that National Grid Transco are considering, with Statnett, the Norwegian grid operator, the construction of an interconnector between the UK and Norway that will enable the import of electricity from Norway—and exports to Norway. While this is a commercial project, and not directly a matter for my Department, I nonetheless welcome it as increased interconnection provides greater flexibility and security.

I am aware that a high proportion of Norwegian electricity is generated by hydro-power, although from time to time, and especially in periods of low rainfall, Norway is a net importer of electricity, which may be from fossil sources.

Iraq

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the value was of (a) imports and (b) exports between each EU member state and Iraq in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [102665]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

Nationalised Businesses

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many nationalised businesses are run by her Department. [103555]

Ms Hewitt: DTI has lead policy responsibility within Government for the following Nationalised Industries:

British Nuclear Fuels PLC

British Coal Corporation

British Shipbuilders

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Repairs (VAT)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners pursuant to his oral statement of 3 February, Official Report, column 20, on church repairs and VAT, when he expects the review of the sixth VAT Directive to be completed. [104248]

Mr. Bell: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 12 March 2003.

Work is ongoing between Commission officials and Member States to finalise the details of the revision to the Sixth Directive. The aim is to get sufficient agreement in the Council for the 'Recast' Directive to be formally adopted before the next enlargement of the EU, scheduled for May/June 2004.

The recasting of the Sixth Directive is a separate exercise to other elements of the Sixth Directive being revised, such as the reduced rates review, scheduled to take place later this year, or the Labour Intensive Services Experiment.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service (Travel Expenses)

Mr. Maples: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what grades in the Civil Service are allowed to travel by air (a) first class and (b) business class at public expense when on official duties. [102887]

Mr. Alexander: Government departments and agencies have delegated authority to decide the rules governing travel by air for their own staff in connection with their employment, subject to the conditions set out in Chapter 8 of the Civil Service Management Code. Paragraph 8.2.1 requires departments and agencies to ensure that staff use the most efficient and economic means of travel in the circumstances, taking into account any management benefit or the needs of staff with disabilities.

Advertising is used by Departments when they judge it is the most cost effective way of delivering the publicity necessary to support a policy or proposal. These figures represent the advertising commissioned on behalf of Departments and Agencies by the Central Office of Information. The figures for the total publicity spend of Government Departments is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The responsibility for ensuring that the guidance on propriety is observed and that value for money is being achieved rests with Ministers and Heads of Departments. The central guidance on these issues is "Guidance on the work of the Government Information Service" which can be found on the GICS website (www.GICS.gov.uk) and on the Cabinet Office website www.cabinet-office.gov.uk

Precedents Book

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's Precedents Book. [103990]

Mr. Alexander: The information requested relates to internal discussion and advice and is therefore exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103623]

Mr. Alexander: The rules relating to special advisers' political activities are set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Further guidance in respect of elections for the Scottish Parliament is set out at paragraph 13 of the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

The reasons for a special adviser's resignation are a private matter between the Department and adviser, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under paragraph 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Information.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

"Waste Not, Want Not"

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make an interim statement on progress towards the development of (a) public expenditure programmes and (b) institutional arrangements needed to implement the recommendations of the Strategy Unit report, "Waste Not, Want Not". [103697]

Mr. Meacher: Following last November's pre-Budget report, a Ministerial Group was established to consider a number of issues, including the proposed new public expenditure programme. The group has met on three occasions, and its decisions will form a key part of the Government's response to the Strategy Unit report. Defra has begun implementing a new institutional structure to drive delivery of the new programme, and is in the process of appointing a programme director.

Animal Diseases (EU Aid)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs why the claim for a share of the 2003 EU financial package to tackle BSE and other animal diseases was submitted late by her Department; and if she will make a statement. [103579]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 March 2003]: The TSE programme was not submitted as a result of an oversight and a subsequent misunderstanding with the Commission. The programme was submitted on 22 October when we asked the Commission to reconsider making an EU contribution. The Commission have now confirmed that it is not legally possible for a payment to be made.

Avian Influenza

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to protect the British poultry industry from avian influenza. [102372]

Mr. Morley: In order to protect the British poultry industry from avian influenza (AI) the Department has taken the following steps.

On 21 February 2003 and 3 March 2003 Defra and the Devolved Administrations issued Declarations under Regulation 27 of the Animals and Animal Products (Import and Export) (England and Wales) Regulations 2000 (and equivalent legislation in the devolved territories) introducing a ban on the import of live poultry and hatching eggs into the UK from Hong Kong and the Netherlands respectively following outbreaks of avian influenza in these countries. These Declarations make it a criminal offence to import live poultry and hatching eggs into the UK from both Hong Kong and the Netherlands. Following a suspicion of AI in Belgium, a further Declaration was issued on 12 March 2003 prohibiting the import of live poultry and hatching eggs from Belgium.

In addition to the above, on 14 March 2003 Defra also banned the import of racing/show pigeons into England from the Netherlands and Belgium under domestic legislation due to the disease risk they presented. Similar Declarations are being introduced in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

In normal circumstances, all birds (poultry or captive birds) entering the UK must be accompanied by an EU model health certificate stating that premises and area of origin are free from AI. In addition, captive bird imports into the UK from Third Countries are subject to a 30 days quarantine during which birds must be laboratory tested for avian influenza.

Defra has reminded egg and poultry producers in the UK about the need for stringent biosecurity measures at all times. To minimise the introduction of AI into their flocks by means of faecal contamination, poultry producers should ensure that their boots, clothing, equipment and vehicles are disinfected. Access by wild birds should be minimised, for instance by clearing up feed spillages. Officials have asked poultry producers in the UK to be vigilant for any signs of respiratory disease in birds and contact their local veterinary office immediately if they have any concerns.

The Department is monitoring the AI situation in the Netherlands and Belgium, and should there be any significant change the risk assessment for the UK will be reviewed.

Environment Council

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she supported French proposals at the Environment Council on 4 March to create a programme to monitor by satellite hydrocarbon discharges at sea; and if she will make a statement. [103825]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 March 2003]: The French made a statement proposing enhanced European co-operation in satellite monitoring of hydrocarbon discharges at sea under "Other Business". There was no substantive debate of the issue and the United Kingdom did not intervene.

The UK has used satellite surveillance on a trial basis, with the Coastguard Maritime Rescue and Coordination Centre acting as the focal point. The experience was positive, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is keen to develop the facility further. The UK already shares satellite information with other Contracting Parties to the Bonn Agreement, and we are working with those Parties and with the EC Management Committee on Marine Pollution with a view to establishing an international monitoring programme.

Fly-tipping

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) individuals and (b) businesses have been successfully prosecuted for incidences of fly-tipping in each year since 1992; and what fines have been levied as a result. [99270]

Mr. Meacher: Both local authorities and the Environment Agency have the powers to prosecute for fly-tipping offences. There is no central register of this information for local authorities. The Environment Agency has collected the requested data since January 2002.

Prosecution data for the 1999, 2000 and 2001 calendar years are available, but relate to the number of offenders prosecuted for the offence of unlawfully depositing waste as described by section 33(1)(a) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Similarly, prosecution data for the 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 financial years are available, but only relate to section 33 offences generally. The Agency is unable to provide prosecution data for 1992–93, 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Data are provided on this basis.

Offences for breach of all of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

1996–97—241

1997–98—345

1998–99—367

All offences under s33(1)(a) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

24 businesses—total fines: 115,071

2000—206

170 individuals—total fines: 156,255;

36 businesses—total fines: 425,800

2001—225

187 individuals—total fines: 158,857;

38 businesses—total fines: 144,050

Offences under s33(1)(a)—fly-tipping only

2002—70

59 individuals—total fines: 51,100;

11 businesses—total fines: 26,200

2003 to date—7

4 individuals—total fines: 950;

3 businesses—total fines: 9,200

The Government are currently discussing with the Environment Agency the potential for setting up a national recording system for fly tipping, which would record this type of data from both the Agency and local authorities in England.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total cost was to public funds of the operations of the Forestry Commission in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK in the last year for which figures are available. [103039]

Mr. Morley: Forestry is a devolved matter, and the cost of Forestry Commission operations in Scotland is the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

However, in the year 2001–02 the commission's net operating cost for GB was £82.7 million.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to review the internal audit procedures of the Forestry Commission. [103040]

Mr. Morley: There are no plans to review the Forestry Commission's internal audit procedures. These are carried out in accordance with the standards and guidance issued by HM Treasury.

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the administrative costs were of the Forestry Commission for each Government Office for the Regions in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2000–01, (c) 2001–02 and (d) 2002–03. [103291]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission is a cross border public authority funded separately in England, Scotland and Wales by Treasury, the Scottish Executive and the Welsh Assembly Government respectively. It does not incur administrative costs for the Government Offices for the Regions.

Glass

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many tonnes of (a) green, (b) white and (c) brown glass have been (i) landfilled, (ii) dumped at sea and (iii) recycled, in each year since 1997. [103336]

Mr. Meacher: The latest available information for UK glass recycling, obtained from the British Glass Federation are listed.

(Thousand tonnes)

	Clear	Green	Brown	Mixed
2002	196.4	242.5	55.4	Unknown
2001	197.1	270.6	65.1	4.8
2000	217.8	279.5	65.4	3.9
1999	171.7	262.8	61.6	2.5
1998	148.7	267.5	60.1	1.4
1997	147.1	219.6	65.5	Unknown

Figures are based on glass that has been recycled back into container manufacture within the UK.

Since 2000 the UK as a whole has recycled approximately 20 per cent more glass into alternative uses, but colour split is unavailable and not included in above table.

Data for tonnages of glass landfilled or dumped at sea are not available.

GM Foodstuffs

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on how the Food Standards Agency's 2002 consumer attitudes to food survey has affected her Department's policy on GM foodstuffs. [102862]

Mr. Morley: My Department noted the Food Standards Agency's 2002 consumer attitudes to food survey. Surveys such as this informed our decision to hold an open and inclusive GM public debate on all the issues surrounding genetic modification.

Our overriding objective on the issue of genetic modification is to safeguard human health and the environment and each application to release a GMO will be dealt with on a case-by-case basis. However, Defra is not responsible for evaluating GM foods, this is a matter for the FSA. Issues raised, in the survey, e.g. food safety and hygiene and labelling are therefore matters for the FSA to address.

Illegal Imports

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how often the Stakeholder Forum on illegal imports has met since 31 March 2002. [103775]

Margaret Beckett: The Stakeholder Forum on illegal imports met on 31 March 2002. It was not established as a continuing body. However, the Government will reconvene a similar body of stakeholders shortly to review progress on illegal imports.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the statement of the hon. Member for Wentworth of 3 February, Official Report, column 5WS, on the landfill tax credit scheme, what projects have received approval for transitional funding; and, in each case, how much funding has been approved. [103631]

Mr. Meacher: The position regarding applications to the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme Sustainable Waste Management Legacy Fund as at Friday 14 March was as follows:

Status	Number	Total revenue costs	Total capital costs	Total project costs	Total shortfall requested
New	7	1,228,999	6,198	1,088,551	807,559
Awaiting further information	14	1,984,174	614,500	4,453,019	1,996,059
Awaiting panel	9	2,330,178	3,550	1,205,681	1,473,433

No applications have yet been approved.

Livestock Movements

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on establishing a 90-mile limit between market and abattoir. [103061]

Mr. Morley: In a written statement on 23 January 2003, Official Report, column 20WS, announcing the Government's decision to reduce the 20 day standstill to six days, I stated that Defra would commission further work into the possibility of imposing a distance limit on the movement of animals through markets or making such moves subject to special licences. A figure of 150 kilometres was suggested.

We will discuss this suggestion further with livestock auctioneers and the farming industry in order to obtain more information about the pattern of movements through markets, and the likely impact of such a restriction, before we reach a view on its merits.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the provision at markets of overnight lairages. [103062]

Mr. Morley: In a written statement on 23 January announcing the Government's decision to reduce the 20 day standstill to six days, I stated that Defra would consult on a number of proposals aimed at improving biosecurity and disease detection, for possible introduction from 1 August, Official Report, columns 20–24WS.

The consultation exercise is now under way. One of the proposals is for a ban on animals being kept overnight at markets. We will consider carefully all the responses to the consultation paper, including any suggestions for alternative measures which might achieve the same objectives, before we reach a view on the merits of the proposals.

Public Expenditure

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will announce the public expenditure programmes and institutional arrangements needed to implement the recommendations of the Strategy Unit report, "Waste Not, Want Not". [103698]

Mr. Meacher: Announcements will be made alongside the Government's response to the Strategy Unit report, which we plan to publish around the time of the Budget.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what further measures are planned to help increase the amount of household waste which is recycled. [102355]

Mr. Meacher: Last year the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit examined the extent of the waste problem, pressures for change and recommended a range of measures to improve performance on sustainable waste management in its report "Waste Not Want Not". We will be publishing our response to the report shortly.

Since publication of Waste Strategy 2000, which set national targets for the recycling or composting of at least 25 per cent. of household waste by 2005 and 30 per cent. by 2010, we have set statutory recycling and composing targets for all local authorities to achieve these goals. We have also introduced the Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund to support local authority investment in appropriate infrastructure. We have also set up the Waste Resources Action Plan (WRAP) to help create stable and efficient markets for recycled materials and to remove market barriers to waste minimisation, reuse and recycling. And the Waste Emissions and Trading Bill will, by setting reducing ceilings on the amount of biodegradable municipal waste going to landfill, provide an indirect incentive to increase recycling.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the communiqué issued by the UN Secretary-General on 11 March concerning the future of its plan to resolve the Cyprus issue. [103260]

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reunification of Cyprus. [103100]

Mr. MacShane: The British Government fully supports the decision of the UN Secretary-General, announced in his press statement of 11 March, to bring to a close the intensive phase of negotiations to secure a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus.

We share Mr. Annan's sense of sadness that this opportunity to secure accession to the EU by a reunited island has been missed. Throughout the talks, the UN Secretary-General, his special adviser, Alvaro de Soto, and his team have negotiated skilfully and professionally. But Mr Denktash's refusal to put the UN proposals to a referendum in the north of Cyprus, and his rejection of the idea of implementing a work programme for the next two weeks, aimed at preparing for a referendum before Cyprus signs the Treaty of Accession with the European Union on 16 April, left Mr. Annan with no alternative to the decision he took.

I have placed a copy of Mr Annan's statement in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he plans to have with President Papadopoulos of the Republic of Cyprus on restarting discussions towards future negotiations on Cyprus; [103273]

(2) what discussions he plans to have with the Government of Turkey on its future role in discussions regarding Cyprus. [103274]

Mr. MacShane: The UN Secretary-General has said that he remains at the disposal of the parties in Cyprus, should they ask for UN support in re-starting the settlement negotiations on the basis of his proposals of 26 February. We fully support the UN Secretary-General in this approach, and we will be making this clear to all concerned.

Diplomatic Relations (France, Germany and Russia)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with (a) France, (b) Germany and (c) Russia. [104010]

Mr. MacShane: The United Kingdom's bilateral relations with France, Germany and Russia remain close. We work with France and Germany effectively on important issues such as European defence and the Convention on the future of Europe, and with Russia on the fight against terrorism. There are areas of policy on which we do not agree on tactics e.g. Iraq. But although our approaches on Iraq may differ, there is no difference between us on the fundamental point of the absolute need to disarm Saddam.

Edgar Fernandes

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the case of Mr. Edgar Fernandes with the Turkish authorities; and if he will meet the hon. Member for Leicester, East to discuss the case of Mr. Edgar Fernandes. [103218]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have been monitoring the investigation into Mr. Fernandes' murder since 1998. Our consular staff in Turkey have regularly attended court hearings relating to the case. We have also raised the case with the Deputy Director General of the Turkish Ministry of Justice, the prosecutor and the family's lawyer. The lawyer and the prosecutor have assured us that rumours that the case may be closed are unfounded. Our consular staff will attend the next court hearing on 10 April and will continue to keep the family fully informed of developments. I do not consider that a meeting with my hon. Friend would be productive at this stage, but we will review this point once the outcome of the case is known.

Iraq

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the verification of UN sanctions placed on Iraq in each of the last five years, including a list of imports and their sources. [102664]

Mr. Rammell: Exports to Iraq are monitored by the UN Office of the Iraq Programme. They provide a breakdown of Iraqi imports by sector. The document is available on the Internet atthe following address http://www.un.org/Depts/oip/background/basicfigures2.html.

The following is a breakdown of Iraqi imports from EU countries over the last six years:

Fully comprehensive information concerning the source and type of goods imported by Iraq is not readily available, and would incur disproportionate cost to discover.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he has made to compensate surviving family members of civilians killed by the United Kingdom and United States military campaign against Iraq. [104011]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK is committed to acting in accordance with international law. If military action is undertaken lawfully, no right to compensation arises. We have always been, and will remain, in the forefront of efforts to help the Iraqi people. Unlike Saddam Hussein, we have always tried to minimise the adverse effects of our actions on Iraqi civilians.

Kosovo

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Albanians have been (a) arrested, (b) charged and (c) convicted in Kosovo of being involved in the destruction of Orthodox churches since June 1999. [103461]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer of 18 March]:.There have been no Albanians arrested, charged, or convicted, in Kosovo for being involved in the destruction of Orthodox churches.

I told Kosovo Albanian leaders during my visits to the province that the destruction of churches and all religious sites were acts of barbarism which bring shame and dishonour to all concerned. NATO-led KFOR continues to patrol and guard churches.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is available for Serbs who were forced to leave Kosovo to return to the province in respect of (a) accommodation and (b) security. [103462]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 18 March 2003]: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) co-ordinates sustainable returns of all Internally Displaced Persons and refugees to Kosovo, including Serbs. The UNHCR, as well as cross-border Non-Governmental Organisations and local authorities, provide information on all aspects of the return process, including on accommodation and security, as well as public services, economic opportunities, and acceptance by the existing communities. It is ultimately a decision for each individual as to whether to return to Kosovo, based on the information provided by these agencies.

We recognise the problems facing Kosovo Serbs. Though returns have clearly not been sufficient, United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK), under the leadership of Michael Steiner, has established an Office for Returns and Communities, and a Strategy for Sustainable Returns for 2003. UNMIK and the NATO-led KFOR provide security within the Province.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list internal flights made by Ministers in his Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (iii) economy class. [103583]

Mr. Straw: The following is a list of internal flights made by Ministers in that capacity in my Department in 2002.

Libya

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Libyan authorities regarding the murder of PC Yvonne Fletcher in 1984; and what progress has been made in finding the killer. [103351]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The ongoing investigation into the murder of WPC Yvonne Fletcher is an operational matter for the Metropolitan Police. Officers from the Metropolitan Police made two visits to Libya in 2002 to discuss the investigation with the relevant Libyan judicial authorities. I also raised the issue with the Libyan Foreign Minister when I visited Libya in August 2002. The Metropolitan Police will continue to pursue this investigation.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103609]

Mr. Straw: No special advisers have left and none will be working in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Ministers in the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make Ministerial announcements in April. [103658]

Mr. Straw: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

China

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with the Chinese Government regarding the pending death sentence on Tenzin Deleg Rinpoche. [103863]

Mr. Rammell: We have raised the case of Tenzin Deleg Rinpoche (together with that of Lobsang Dhondup) three times with the Chinese authorities. We also supported strongly worded EU demarches to the Chinese and an EU declaration on the case. The Chinese authorities have confirmed that his original sentence, the death sentence, suspended for two years, has been upheld.

We shall continue to raise our concerns with the Chinese about this case and the treatment of Tibetans more generally.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with other European Union member states on human rights issues in Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [103795]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last discussed human rights issues in Turkey with EU colleagues at the European Council in Copenhagen in December 2002. At official level, our dialogue with EU partners is constant, in Ankara, Brussels and elsewhere.

UN Compensation Commission

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who the UK representatives are on the UN Compensation Commission; how much compensation has so far been disbursed, broken down by country of origin of the case; and how much has been committed to be disbursed (a) in total and (b) by country of origin of the case. [103840]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK, as a Security Council member, sits on the Governing Council of the United Nations Compensation Commission and is represented by HMG officials in Geneva and London. Claims for compensation from the UNCC are dealt with by the FCO Consular Claims Section and through our diplomatic mission in Geneva.

The commission has received about 2.6 million claims seeking compensation in excess of US$300 billion. The majority of these claims have been resolved. Nearly 100 Governments have submitted claims, as well as various UN organisations. Details of which countries have submitted claims can be found on the UNCC website: www.unog.ch/uncc.

DEFENCE

Advertising Expenditure

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the Department spent on advertising in Scotland in each year since 1999 on (a) television, (b) newspapers, (c) radio, (d) magazines, (e) billboards and (f) sporting events. [102327]

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent in each of the last 24 months on (a) television, (b) radio and (c) newspaper advertising for each of the armed forces. [103525]

Dr. Moonie: This information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, since 1999–2000 Ministry of Defence's advertising and publicity costs have been published in the annual Departmental Performance Report, broken down into categories of RN, Army, RAF and civilian recruitment, PR, marketing and business support services, Chief of PR, sales promotion, scholarships and National Employers' Liaison Committee. Copies of these documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Age Diversity

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department completed its diagnostic review for compliance with the Government's Code of Practice for Age Diversity in Employment; and what changes his Department plans to make following the review. [99420]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence reviewed its employment policies in accordance with the Government's Code of Practice for Age Diversity in Employment and took steps to integrate age into its equal opportunities policies through implementation of the Performance and Innovation Unit's report "Winning the Generation Game". This made specific recommendations for the civil service to ensure that policies are age-proofed in preparation for the legislation to be introduced in 2006. The review was concluded in May 2002. It included consideration of raising the retirement age to allow those staff who currently have a retirement age of 60 the option to stay on to the age of 65. The conclusion was that there should be no change to the retirement policy at this stage, but that it should be kept under review in light of the emerging legislation. The Ministry of Defence is committed to ensuring that its employment policies do not discriminate unfairly on grounds of age or for any other reason.

Armed Forces' Pay

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held with representatives of Her Majesty's forces on the formation of a federation to represent the armed forces in negotiations over pay and working conditions; and if he will make a statement. [103868]

Dr. Moonie: None. The independent Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB) makes recommendations to the Government on pay, after gathering evidence from a wide variety of sources, including Service personnel of all ranks. The AFPRB system commands widespread respect throughout the Services.

Members of the Armed Forces may also express their views about working and living conditions through Continuous Attitude Surveys, Service personnel liaison teams and their own chains of Command, who have a duty to look after the welfare and well-being of personnel under their authority.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the high and low pay banding system will apply to all members of HM forces; and if he will make a statement. [103870]

Dr. Moonie: The majority of Armed Forces personnel have now transferred to Pay 2000, which was implemented on 1 April 2001 and introduced an incremental, two-tier system of higher and lower pay bands for regular serving other ranks. A full review of Pay 2000 will take place to inform the 2004 pay round but there are currently no plans to introduce higher and lower pay bands for officers, although they will continue to be subject to an incremental pay system.

Armed Services (Free Travel)

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ranks in the armed services are allowed to travel by air (a) first class and (b) business class at public expense when on official duties. [102886]

Dr. Moonie: Air transport is the normal method of movement for Service Personnel and their families travelling to and from the United Kingdom. Operational airlift for all personnel, including senior officers, is conducted using either trooping flights or commercial charter for which there is no business class entitlement. The booking of seats on civilian commercial flights to destinations not served by air trooping services, or to which service flights are not available at the time required, is permissible but only with the prior approval of the appropriate budget holder.

The number of flying hours in one day dictates the seat class entitlement at public expense. There is no entitlement to first class travel for flights under 2.5 hours duration.

For flights over 2.5 hours, only 4-star Service officers are permitted to travel first class. Where there are only first or third class seats available, 2-star officers and above may also travel first class.

For flights of 4 hours duration or longer, 1-star Service officers may travel first class when a business class seat is unavailable.

All ranks of the armed services are entitled to travel business class—if a seat is available—for flights over 2.5 hours. Leave travel is undertaken at economy rates.

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by the Department; what their scope was; when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102056]

Dr. Moonie: Although some parts of the Ministry of Defence have been involved in the sponsorship of award schemes open to external candidates, we have not devoted significant resources to the promotion of any such scheme in 2001 or 2002.

Blood-Clotting Bandages

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether blood-clotting bandages will be available to troops deployed in the Middle East. [103038]

Dr. Moonie: No. There are currently no fibrin (blood clotting agent) impregnated bandages licensed in the United Kingdom and such bandages will not be issued to United Kingdom service personnel deployed in the Middle East.

Chemical/Biological Weapons

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate the Government have made of the useable lifetime of (a) anthrax (wet form), (b) smallpox, (c) VX and (d) mustard gas; and if he will make a statement. [103578]

Dr. Moonie: The stability of these materials depends very much on the initial purity and the precise storage conditions. Their usable lifetime as chemical or biological warfare agents, can range from a few months to several tens of years. It should be noted that even partially degraded material may still pose a significant hazard.

Departmental Telephone Directory

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the most recent internal telephone directory for the Department was published; how often it is updated; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [102027]

Dr. Moonie: The most recent paper copy of the internal phone directory for the Ministry of Defence was published in June 1999. However, the directory has been regularly updated and maintained on the internal Defence websites, allowing access to over 100,000 staff. This is in line with the Government targets for electronic working. For those without internal web access, the directory is published quarterly on CD ROM and distributed to over 1,000 Defence staff, authorised industry partners and Defence trading funds. The latest CD ROM is due to be published at the end of March 2003.

The directory is protectively marked RESTRICTED. The Directory is therefore only available to HMG Armed Forces staff, MOD Civilians and cleared Defence industry partners and trading funds.

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the total spending of his Department on entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92392]

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's hospitality budget (a) is in 2002–03 and (b) was in each of the last three years; and how much was left unspent at the end of each financial year. [99577]

Dr. Moonie: Expenditure on entertainment by the Ministry of Defence in each year since 1996–97 was as follows:

Year	£ million
1996–97	5.145
1997–98	5.035
1998–99	5.563
1999–2000	5.538
2000–01	6.001
2001–02	6.030

Figures for the years prior to 1996–97 cannot be provided on a consistent basis.

Due to the introduction of Resource Accounting and Budgeting, from 2002–03 onward entertainment costs will be reported on a different basis. The outturn for 2002–03, on this basis, is estimated to be £6.309 million.

These figures reflect expenditure incurred by the Ministry of Defence, the establishments and formations of the Armed Forces at home and abroad, and by individual officers occupying appointments for which entertainment allowances were payable. Expenditure incurred on entertainment is strictly for official purposes only, and is made in accordance with departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in Government Accounting.

EU Defence Ministers Council

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent progress of plans to create a Council of EU Defence ministers; and what the functions of that Council are expected to be. [103873]

Mr. Hoon: Defence Ministers currently meet twice each year in the formation of the EU Council of Ministers known as the General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC). There have recently been proposals, in the framework of the Convention on the Future of Europe, for a new Council configuration bringing together Ministers of Defence, focusing on defence capability matters, including particularly the running of the proposed European Defence Capabilities Development and Acquisition Agency. Although establishment of such a new configuration would not require a change in the Treaty, it is likely that the issue will be dealt with as part of the Convention deliberations. No decisions have yet been taken.

General Dynamics UK

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 636W, on General Dynamics UK, which company was contracted to provide the Defence Stores Management System; whether the programme is still running; and if he will make a statement. [102566]

Mr. Ingram: Four companies (Electronic Data Systems, ASI, and Cap Gemini Ernst and Young, with IBM acting in a project integration role) were contracted to provide elements of the Defence Stores Management Solution (DSMS). The programme was suspended in January 2002 on grounds of affordability, and the Department is currently reviewing its requirements for an advanced inventory management capability that takes account of developments in software technology and in the light of independent external advice from McKinsey and Co.

Gulf Forces

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the UK forces serving in the Gulf area are under 18; and if he will make a statement as to their roles. [104048]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 5 March 2003 Official Report, column 1053W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough (Mr. Stinchcombe).

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether UNMOVIC has requested information about sales of (a) materials and expertise relevant to the delivery of weapons of mass destruction and (b) missiles with a range greater than 150 kilometres from International Military Services Ltd. [103834]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

The United Nations Monitoring, Verification and Inspection Commission have not sought any information from the Government about the alleged provision of any goods or services to Iraq by International Military Services Ltd.

Iraq

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many units of the armed forces (a) regulars and (b) reserves have specific chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear training; how many of these have been deployed to the Gulf; and if he will make a statement. [103432]

Mr. Ingram: All armed forces personnel, including the reserves, are given training to protect themselves in a Nuclear, Biological or Chemical (NBC) environment, as part of their basic training. This is refreshed at regular intervals. The Joint NBC Regiment, which also includes a reserve element, and individuals within other units, receive specialist NBC training.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) UK military personnel and (b) military personnel of other nationalities have died in military operations in Iraq since 1990; and if he will make statement. [99605]

Mr. Ingram: There have been 25 United Kingdom military operational fatalities in Iraq since 1990, 23 during the Gulf conflict in 1991 and two in 1994.

We do not hold data in respect of other nations.

Medical Facilities (Gulf)

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which British forces will be dependent on hospital and other medical facilities provided by (a) the USA and (b) other countries in the event of conflict in the Gulf. [102375]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 11 March 2003]: If hostilities were to occur, British forces would have access to a comprehensive range of United Kingdom medical facilities that we have deployed to the region. As is normal practice, we have also agreed reciprocal arrangements with the United States and have arrangements in place to enable United Kingdom personnel to have access to specialist medical facilities in other countries.

Military Forces Training

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries in which British military forces have provided training since 1997. [103465]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 19 March 2003]: Between January 1997 and March 2003 British Military Forces provided Ministry of Defence endorsed, in country, training to 71 countries. A complete list of those countries is shown in the table.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy training exercises and planned deployments have been cancelled as a result of Operation Fresco. [103997]

Mr. Ingram: The majority of personnel providing fire cover for Operation Fresco have been taken from ships and submarines undergoing periods of refit or maintenance, or which had returned from operational deployments and were not programmed to undergo further deployments. Only two of the ships from which personnel were taken for fire-fighting duties were prevented from undertaking operational tasks: HMS Manchester was withdrawn from NATO's Standing Force Atlantic, and HMS Lancaster from Atlantic Patrol (South). As a result, HMS Lancaster was withdrawn from the Chilean-hosted exercise Teamwork South 2003.

Although the firefighters' dispute has reduced the number of naval vessels going through operational sea training, there has been no need to cancel joint maritime courses as a result.

Overseas Trips

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his Ministerial team in 2002; and what the (a) purpose and (b) cost was in each case. [101491]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W, by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103619]

Dr. Moonie: The rules relating to special advisers' political activities are set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Further guidance in respect of elections for the Scottish Parliament is set out at paragraph 13 of the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in United Kingdom Departments, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

The reasons for a special adviser's resignation are a private matter between the department and adviser, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under Exemption 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans ministers of the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make ministerial announcements in April. [103653]

Dr. Moonie: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in United Kingdom Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

SCOTLAND

Fishing Industry

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when she discussed with the Chancellor of the Exchequer new funding for fishing communities following the EU decision in December 2002 on quota cuts. [103957]

Mrs. Liddell: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on a wide range of issues.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scotland Office was first informed of the £55 million EU funding for Scotland's fishing industry; and by whom it was informed. [103959]

Mrs. Liddell: Other Government Departments and the Scottish Executive keep the Scotland Office regularly informed of all important matters relating to the fishing industry.

TRANSPORT

Biofuels

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the (a) number and (b) locations of biofuel filling stations in the UK; and what efforts are being made to increase the number of filling stations where biofuels are sold. [103550]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government estimate that there are currently approximately 100 filling stations retailing biodiesel in the UK, with the distribution of outlets largely skewed towards the north of the country. The number and regional availability of these sites is expected to continue to increase as the market develops further, driven by the 20 pence per litre duty incentive, introduced in July 2002, and positive customer reaction to the fuel.

Biofuels are one of the many ways in which companies and individuals can reduce the impact on the environment of their transport decisions. In order to give consumers better access to information on biofuels, the Government have commissioned the Energy Saving Trust to develop its TransportEnergy website (www.TransportEnergy.co.uk) to include helpful advice on biofuels, including the location of UK retailing sites. This information should be on-line shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Brain Injuries

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will include brain injury as a classification sub-heading within the overall published statistics for accidents sustained and injuries treated in NHS hospitals in Northern Ireland. [103239]

Mr. Browne: To routinely include brain injury as a classification sub-heading could be misleading and would not necessarily meet the needs of the majority of the users of the published statistics.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is currently working towards the production of detailed statistics to be published on the Internet. These will include tables showing the number of patients admitted to hospital by the type of injury or disease using the International Classification of Diseases (ICD10).

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the facilities funded by the Department of Health for post-acquired brain injury rehabilitation. [103240]

Mr. Browne: Information on the range of facilities is not held centrally. Provision of post-acquired brain injury rehabilitation varies widely depending on the clinical needs of the individual. It includes statutory provision and that provided by specialist voluntary sector organisations, which may also be funded by the Department.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many acquired brain injury incidents related to road traffic accidents and other causes there were in each of the last three years, broken down by health board area; and what the survival rates were among such patients. [103241]

Mr. Browne: Details on the number of persons admitted to hospital with an acquired brain injury related to road traffic accidents and other causes by health board area are provided in the tables. Information on their survival rates is not available.

Brain injury has been defined as persons suffering from an intracranial injury (SO6 in the international classification of diseases ICD10).

Data are supplied by Health Board of residence.

Discharges and deaths are used as an approximation for admissions.

Ladies' Hockey

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been allocated to ladies' hockey in Northern Ireland from (a) lottery funding and (b) Exchequer funding in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02, (iii) 2002–03 and (iv) 2003–04; and how much money in total has been allocated to the women in receipt of funding for help in preparation for the 2004 Olympic Games. [103707]

Angela Smith: The total amount of money allocated to ladies' hockey in Northern Ireland from (a) lottery funding and (b) Exchequer funding in the years listed is as follows:

Funding	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
Lottery	0	8,850	24,400	Not available
Exchequer	22,000	22,000	26,000	Not available

Note:

The lottery figures take into account awards made from the Talented Athlete, Talented Athlete Next Generation and Talented Junior programmes.

No additional funding is available or has been allocated to ladies' hockey beyond those listed above. Furthermore any funding awarded is to assist ladies' hockey prepare for major competitions in general rather than for specific competitions such as the 2004 Olympic Games.

Local Government Finance

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what cash reserves are available to Castlereagh Borough Council; and what statutory requirement there is for local authorities to keep reserves. [103359]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I am not in a position to state the level of cash reserves available to Castlereagh Borough Council. There is no statutory requirement for district councils to keep reserves nor is there any obligation on them to publish annual accounts. There is provision, however, in local government legislation which allows the ratepayers of the district access and opportunity to examine the detail of the accounts of their local council.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the indebtedness is of the councils in Northern Ireland. [103360]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The latest figures available relating to the level of indebtedness of district councils are at 31 March 2002 and have been extracted from the unaudited accounts for the financial year 2001–2002. The amounts of loans outstanding, per head of population for each district council are set out in the following table.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what level of debt Castlereagh Borough Council has acquired up to the end of the last financial year. [103361]

Mr. Paul Murphy: At 31 March 2002, the amount of loans outstanding, per head of Castlereagh Borough Council's population is 277. This figure has been extracted from the unaudited account for the financial year 2001/2002.

North-South Ministerial Council

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total cost is in 2002–03 of the Secretariat of the north south ministerial council. [103251]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The 2002–03 budget allocation for the north/south ministerial council joint secretariat (north) is £735,000. Final outturn figures for 2002–03 will not be available for some time.

Pharmacies

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what impact he expects the implementation of the proposed OFT recommendations to have upon people employed in community pharmacies; [103329]

(2) what benefits he estimates would be gained by the deregulation of pharmacies as recommended by the OFT investigation into the control of entry regulations for pharmacy contracts; and what studies have been carried out to assess the impact of pharmacy deregulation on the businesses of community pharmacies; [103327]

(3) what effect he estimates (a) increased competition in the pharmaceutical industry will have on prescription charges and (b) the deregulation of control of entry requirements for pharmacy contracts will have on disadvantaged groups in society; and if he will make a statement; [1[illegible]330]

(4) what effect he expects the implementation of the proposed OFT regulations will have on (a) the distribution of pharmacies and (b) pharmacist and patient relations. [103328]

Mr. Browne: The Office of Fair Trading examined the UK market for retail pharmacy services in order to consider whether consumers are best served by the current statutory controls under which pharmacies can dispense NHS prescriptions. The OFT conclusion was that they are not and their report therefore recommended abolition of these controls in order to improve competition; reduce prices for over the counter medicines; and improve both access to, and the quality of, pharmaceutical services.

Competition and consumer matters are reserved to the United Kingdom Government in Westminster and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is responsible for co-ordinating the response across Government to the report. However, Health Service pharmacy policy is a devolved matter and the regulations imposing controls on pharmacies are a matter for Ministers in each country. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is therefore working closely with Health Departments and other Government Departments to make sure that Government's response to the report takes account not only of competition and consumer interests, but widerpublic policy objectives. It is not considered that the report will affect current prescription charge arrangements.

No decisions have been reached on the OFT recommendation and, as yet, there are no proposals for changes to the legislation. We have invited views from a wide range of stakeholders and are considering these carefully. This includes responses from political representatives, the pharmaceutical profession, the Health Service, patient representative bodies and the general public.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92243]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For the Northern Ireland Office it is not possible to disaggregate spend on publicity and advertising. The figures below cover both, for the core Department and its Agencies. Information on NDPBs is not held centrally.

	Total
1995–96	2,326,800
1996–97	1,247,400
1997–98	1,077,706

2001–02	1,223,491
2002–03	*1,083,477

* Full year estimate based on spend to date.

Within the Northern Ireland administration it was not possible to disaggregate figures for publicity and advertising in all cases. Combined figures for publicity and advertising for the Northern Ireland Departments, its agencies and NDPBs for each year are set out in the following table.

	Total Departments	Agencies
1995–96	3,153,960	1,956,472

Royal Prerogative of Mercy

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the Royal Prerogative of Mercy has been exercised in respect of members of terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland in each year since 1998. [85886]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I am sorry for the delay in replying.

Since 1998 the Royal Prerogative of Mercy has been granted 18 times in respect of individuals convicted of terrorist offences relating to Northern Ireland. The breakdown of cases is as follows:

1998: 1

1999: 1

2000: 7

2001: 6

2002: 3

Stevens Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the cost was of the Stevens inquiry in each year since its establishment; and which Department is meeting the cost. [102641]

Jane Kennedy: The cost of the Stevens inquiry in each year since its establishment is:

2000–01	1,036,483.57
2001–02	1,932,338.35
2002–03	920,473.42

These costs are being met by the PSNI, which receives its funding through the Northern Ireland Office.

Swimming

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been allocated to swimming in Northern Ireland from (a) lottery funding and (b) Exchequer funding, in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02, (iii) 2002–03 and (iv) 2003–04; and for which country the two swimmers allocated funding to prepare for the 2004 Olympic Games will be competing. [103708]

Angela Smith: The total amount of money allocated to swimming in Northern Ireland from (a) lottery funding and (b) Exchequer funding in the years listed is as follows:

Funding	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
(a) Lottery	43,861	32,828	26,468	Not available
(b) Exchequer	20,000	20,000	23,500	Not available

Note:

The lottery figures take into account awards made from the Talented Athlete, Talented Athlete Next Generation and Talented Junior programmes.

Two swimmers are currently on funding programmes associated with the Lottery Sports Fund and both have as their targeted events, competition at the 2004 Olympic Games. Both athletes, as members of the local governing body for the sport, Swim Ulster, which is affiliated with the national governing body, Swim Ireland, will compete for Ireland if selected for Olympic competition. However, selection for competition at the 2004 Olympic Games has not yet taken place and it would be premature to state that either swimmer will be competing.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Licence

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many households received free TV licences in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02, broken down by type of licence; how many households are expected to receive free TV licences in (i) 2002–03, (ii) 2003–04, (iii) 2004–05 and (iv) 2005–06; and what the cost has been. [103805]

Dr. Howells: The number of free licences issued, by type of licence and in total, in 2000–01 and 2001–02, the forecast total for each of the years 2002–03 to 2005–06 (for which a breakdown by type of licence is not available), and the actual or forecast costs for each year, are as follows.

	Number of free licences issued by type of licence (thousands)
	Colour	Black and white	Accommodation for residential care	Total free licences issued (thousands)	Cost (£ million)
2000–01	2,963	36	154	3,153	323

2003–04[1]				3,927	407
2004–05[1]				3,952	425
2005–06[1]				3,982	448

For 2000–01 and 2001–02: Ernst and Young Audit Reports.

For 2002–03 and subsequent years: pre-Budget report, November 2002

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people were (a) eligible for and (b) in receipt of a free TV licence in each of the last three years in Chorley constituency. [104071]

Dr. Howells: TV Licensing, which administers free television licences for the over-75s as agent for the BBC, is not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of free licences issued. However, estimates based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 5,700 people aged 75 or over living in the Chorley constituency.

Television Programming

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what recent research her Department has undertaken regarding programming on (a) terrestrial, (b) cable and (c) satellite television channels; and if she will place copies in the Library; [103818]

(2) what recent quantitative research and assessments her Department has undertaken relating to the news content of (a) terrestrial, (b) cable and (c) satellite news programmes; and if she will lay copies of those results in the Library. [103787]

Dr. Howells: My Department has not undertaken any research in these areas.

Museum Funding

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she expects that funding will be available for Hubs allocated phase two status in the Renaissance in the Region Museum Funding Initiative; how much funding is available for the (a) phase two Hubs and (b) the phase one Hubs; what process the phase two Hubs will be required to undertake in order to receive their funding; and whether this process repeats the initial competition for phase one status and funding. [102534]

Dr. Howells: We will be providing £70 million for regional museums from this year until 2005–06, which will represent a 200 per cent. increase in central Government funding by the end of the spending review period. Extra funding will also be made available to the national museums to enable them to work in partnership with regional museums. Additionally, there will be funds from the Department for Education and Skills to support museums' education.

The funds will be distributed through nine Regional Hubs led by major regional museums. The Regional Hubs selected for priority funding are the North East, South West and West Midlands Hubs, but Resource: The Council for Museums, Archives and Libraries will continue to provide a level of support to all nine Regional Hubs.

Resource will put its recommendations to Ministers on funding allocations for all nine Regional Hubs ready for announcement in April. All Regional Hubs will then be asked to submit a detailed Business Plan by January 2004, setting out their programme of work for 2004–06. This will not be a competitive process and will build on information previously submitted.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103621]

Dr. Howells: The rules relating to special advisers' political activities are set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Further guidance in respect of elections for the Scottish Parliament is set out at paragraph 13 of the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

The reasons for a special adviser's resignation are a private matter between the Department and adviser, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under paragraph 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Information.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans ministers of the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make Ministerial announcements in April. [103655]

Dr. Howells: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Working Group (14-to-19)

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funding has been allocated for the 14–19 working group. [102298]

Mr. Miliband: The total support required by the working group has not yet been finalised. Administration costs in relation to those staff currently assigned to support the group are expected to be £230,000 in 2003–04.

Aim Higher Scheme

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what opportunities the Aim Higher scheme will provide to schools to access additional funding; and whether it will be open to schools not eligible under the Excellence Cluster scheme in West Cumbria. [103141]

Margaret Hodge: The Excellence Challenge programme, which will be renamed Aimhigher, provides direct funding to schools and colleges in areas of disadvantage to raise attainment and aspirations of young people. We will be expanding this programme to include Excellence Clusters, including West Cumbria, from this September. Areas which are not covered by this programme may benefit from funding through the Higher Education Funding Council's Aimhigher: Partnerships for Progression initiative.

Ballet Schools

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many ballet schools there are in England and Wales; and what Government support is available to pupils. [103044]

Mr. Miliband: My Department does not keep lists of the many small ballet schools in England. The Council for Dance Education and Training holds a comprehensive list of providers.

There are four independent specialist ballet schools in England offering places to exceptionally talented children aged 11 to 19. They all participate in the Government's Music and Dance Scheme (MDS), which provides means-tested support with fees, and they all provide vocational training alongside a good academic education.

Means-tested support for fees and maintenance is also provided for students aged 16+ by three of the MDS schools and a further four private further education institutions through the Department's Dance and Drama Awards.

Schools issues in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Connexions Service

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what grants have been made by the Connexions service to voluntary organisations working with young people for each region in which it operates. [103678]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Connexions Partnerships make both grant awards and contract payments to voluntary organisations. The latest available data are for the nine months to December 2002. It reflects the different stages of development of the 41 Connexions Partnerships that were operating for all or part of the period. Information from Partnerships suggests that grants awards and contract payments will increase further towards the end of the financial year to March 2003.

Region	Grant awards £k	Contract payments £k	Total payments to voluntary organisations £k
Eastern	149	0	149
East Midlands	138	85	223
London	345	778	1,123
North East	28	0	28
North West	1,141	0	1,141

South West	154	532	686
West Midlands	61	369	430
Yorkshire and Humberside	58	553	611
Total	2,074	2,445	4,519

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what targets he has set the Connexions service for the level of grants it should be making to voluntary organisations working with young people. [103679]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There are no targets for the level of grants that Connexions Partnerships should make to voluntary and community organisations.

Under most circumstances, we would expect Connexions Partnerships to enter into a contract with each of their service providers, including voluntary and community organisations. However, in some cases the need for a contract may present a barrier to an organisation's involvement, particularly in the case of some small voluntary or community groups. In such circumstances, Partnerships can allocate up to £30,000 to an organisation as a grant award in any 12-month period. The total amount awarded in this way is subject to an overriding limit of 5 per cent. of the Partnership's DfES grant allocation, although this may be exceeded with the agreement of the local Government Office. While Partnerships are strongly encouraged to make use of this facility, priorities and structures inevitably vary between and within areas, and it is for this reason that we do not set targets.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent by Connexions, in each region, on (a) purchasing property, (b) renting property and (c) construction and refurbishment work in each year it has been operational. [103680]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The information requested is not collected in the detail and format requested. The following table gives the expenditure of Connexions Partnerships by region for 2001–02 and the first nine months of 2002–03 recorded as "Premises Costs" in their accounts. This expenditure will include items such as rent, purchase of property, refurbishment, construction, fixtures, fittings, local taxation etc.

[4] Reflects the total expenditure for the 9 months to December 2002 for the 41 Partnerships that were operating for all or part of the period. Although a further three Partnerships began operations during October and November 2002 they were not required to produce accounts for December, so no information is available for them.

Further Education Funding

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make funds available for further education colleges to accept year 11 pupils who are without a school place. [103354]

Mr. Miliband: Local Education Authorities are responsible for ensuring all children of statutory school age have access to full-time education. They can use their funding to purchase education for children over the age of 14 from further education colleges, where this is an appropriate way of meeting their needs.

Fire Prevention

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funds he has allocated (a) for fire prevention measures and (b) for the installation of water sprinklers in (i) schools and (ii) PE colleges in 2003–04. [103674]

Mr. Miliband: The Department does not specifically fund either fire prevention measures or the installation of water sprinklers in schools and FE colleges. If the assessment of risks to particular premises identify specific fire prevention measures, including water sprinklers, as necessary then the expenditure would come from normal school, local education authority or FE college budgets, drawing on capital allocations made available to them by the Department.

Foundation Degrees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether all foundation degree students will be guaranteed a future funded year's study in order to upgrade to a full degree. [103113]

Margaret Hodge: As well as being awards in their own right foundation degrees can lead to one or more honours degrees. Foundation degree graduates are eligible to apply for the honours degree. The entry requirements are determined by the higher education institution offering the programme of study.

Primary School Admission Criteria

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether an LEA is free to set proximity to school premises as the admission criterion for a primary school. [102872]

Mr. Miliband: Yes. Where a LEA is the admission authority for a school it decides on the school's admission arrangements, which must include criteria for deciding which pupils should get places if there are more applicants than places. Proximity to the school is a lawful and acceptable criterion.

School Buildings

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the findings of the Audit Commission Report on Improving School Buildings. [101837]

Mr. Miliband: We welcome this report whose conclusions provide an endorsement of our school capital investment programme and our initiative to encourage the development of asset management planning in LEAs and schools. We intend to build upon the progress made in improving the school stock in our new approach to capital investment, for which proposals were set out in the recent consultation paper 'Building Schools for the Future'.

We are discussing with the Audit Commission our approaches to addressing the specific recommendations for Government.

School Sixth Forms

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the average A level points score per pupil for 11 to 18 years schools with sixth forms containing (a) 50 or fewer, (b) 51 to 100, (c) 101 to 150, (d) 151 to 200, (e) 201 to 250 and (f) more than 250 pupils in each of the last three years. [100882]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 13 March 2003]: The average GCE A/AS point score per candidate aged 16–18 in school sixth forms in 1999 to 2001 (the most recent three years for which data are available):

151–200	18.7	18.5	18.8
201–250	19.4	19.9	20.5
More than 250	19.7	19.6	20.2
Total	18.4	18.6	19.1

Schools (Warrington)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools in Warrington, North have, since 1997, had (a) new classrooms, (b) new dining rooms, (c) new toilet blocks and (d) other new buildings. [103186]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 17 March 2003]: We do not hold complete information in the form requested. However, in 1997–98 the Government introduced New Deal for Schools (NDS) as a new additional programme targeted specifically at addressing the backlog of urgent repairs in school buildings that had built up after eighteen years of under-funding under the previous administration. This programme was bid-based and was in addition to other capital funds made available to Warrington local education authority (Cheshire local education authority prior to local government reorganisation in 1998–99). NDS ran through four phases from 1997–98 to 2000–01. Table A shows the schools in the Warrington, North constituency which benefited from investment through the original NDS programme for these purposes. From 2001–02 most capital funding available for building improvements in schools has been allocated to local authorities and schools by needs-related formulae. It is for local authorities and schools to decide how their capital allocations are invested and prioritised between projects, in line with their local asset management planning. Also, from 2000–01 every school has received direct capital allocations to address their highest priorities. In addition, each year authorities have been able to bid for Basic Need funding for the provision of new pupil places. Table B shows all capital funding for school buildings allocated to Warrington local education authority (including voluntary aided schools) since 1998–99.

Table A: New deal for schools

Student Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will estimate (a) the sum available in the Higher Education White Paper for student grants for each year of the spending review and (b) the cost of the Excellence in Cities Opportunity Bursary schemes in each year; and whether the bursary scheme will remain available to top up grants. [103426]

Margaret Hodge: The Government has earmarked almost £300 million in funds for the new Higher Education Grant. The Grant will be phased in, cohort by cohort, starting in autumn 2004, and therefore, during this spending review period, the costs will gradually build up towards that level of expenditure.

£37 million has been set aside to provide up to 26,000 opportunity bursaries over the three years starting in 2001–02. 2003 is the last year of the opportunity bursaries pilot; it is being replaced by the new grant. Students with opportunity bursaries will remain eligible to receive their payments in years two and three of the course, when the new grant is introduced.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimates he has made of the extra income that will be received under the proposed £3,000 tuition fee limit; and if he will make a statement. [103358]

Margaret Hodge: It will be for each university and college to decide what fees they charge from 2006 subject to securing an acceptable access agreement. The extra income raised will depend on those decisions.

Teachers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teachers (a) left and (b) joined the teaching profession in Essex between May 1997 and the latest available date. [103122]

Mr. Miliband: The following table shows the numbers of teachers leaving[1] full-time or part time[2] service in the maintained schools sector and teachers entering or returning[3] to full-time or part-time teaching in the maintained schools sector in Essex.

The DfES annual survey of teachers in service (618G) shows that the number of full-time equivalent regular teachers working in the maintained sector in Essex rose from 10,580 to 10,920 between January 1998 and January 2002.

Essex	Leavers	Entrants/ returners
1 April 1997 to 31 March 1994[4]	1,190	1,290
1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999	1,090	950
1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000[5]	970	1,040

[1] Leavers are those who were in full-time or part-time teaching in the maintained schools sector immediately before the period shown, who were not in service in that sector at the end of the period shown. Teachers leaving are based on pension returns. Some teachers may have moved from known service to service not recorded on the teacher pension return. Some leavers will be taking career breaks and will return to service at a later date.

[2] Around 10 per cent.–20 per cent. of part-timers may not be included.

[3] Those in service in the maintained schools sector at the end of the period shown who were not in service in that sector in England immediately before the period shown. Includes newly qualified entrants, those who deferred entry and those returning from breaks or transferring from outside the maintained schools sector in England.

[4] Higher than usual numbers of premature retirements, following changes to the retirement regulations, contributed to the high levels of leavers in 1997–98.

[5] The most recent data available at LEA level are for 1999–2000.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teachers were employed in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the (i) City of York and (ii) North Yorkshire education authority in each year since they were established. [103135]

Mr. Miliband: The table provides the full-time equivalent number of regular teachers in the maintained sector, as at January of each year.

Schools	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
City of York
Nursery/primary	630	610	630	650	650	680
Secondary	600	600	600	640	660	650

PRIME MINISTER

Operation Ore

Adam Price: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has been informed of the identity of any of the individuals under investigation as part of Operation Ore. [104059]

The Prime Minister: It is Government policy not to comment on ongoing police investigations.

TREASURY

Budget

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he chose this year's Budget date. [102881]

Dawn Primarolo: Budgets are traditionally held in either March or April.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his statement of 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 5WS, on the landfill tax credit scheme, how much transitional funding is available in the year commencing 1 April 2003 through the landfill tax credit scheme for eligible projects falling into Objects C and/or CC in (a) the UK, (b) England, (c) Wales, (d) Scotland and (e) Northern Ireland. [103633]

John Healey: The transition funding for England comes from England's share of the £100 million that the reform of the LTCS made available for 2003–04, as announced in PBR 2002. The devolved Administrations will be allocated their share of this £100 million according to the Barnett formula and will determine how this is spent.

National Insurance

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 12 March 2003, Official Report, column 283W, on national insurance, if he will publish the estimates made by the Government Actuary's Department regarding changes to benefit rates and contribution rates. [103967]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the "Report by the Government Actuary on the Drafts of the Social Security Benefits Uprating Order 2003 and the Social Security (Contributions) (Re-rating and National Insurance Funds Payments) Order 2003", published in February 2003. A copy is held in the House Library.

Service Pensions

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to delay the payment of service pensions until a serviceman reaches 65 years. [103179]

Dr. Moonie: I have been asked to reply.

The Pensions Green Paper, "Simplicity, Security and Choice: Working and Saving for Retirement" was published for consultation in December of last year and includes a proposal that the age at which unreduced pensions should be payable to members of Public Service Pension Schemes should be raised from age 60 to 65, to reflect increasing longevity and common practice in the private sector. The paper acknowledges that some occupations require a recognised physical capacity which justifies payment of pension at a lower age and the Armed Forces pay an immediate pension as early as age 37. However, for those members who leave before reaching such an age, their pensions benefits accrued through future service from a date to be decided would also be deferred to age 65. The Ministry of Defence will be offering its comments on this and other proposals put forward in the Green Paper shortly.

Special Advisers

Pete Wishart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103625]

Ruth Kelly: The rules relating to special advisers' political activities are set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Further guidance in respect of elections for the Scottish Parliament is set out at paragraph 13 of the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

The reasons for a special adviser's resignation are a private matter between the Department and adviser, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under paragraph 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Information.

Tax Credits

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many calls were received by the working families' tax credit and disabled person's tax credit dedicated telephone line for hon. Members and members of the devolved administrations in each year since its creation; and what the cost of the line has been in each year. [103519]

Dawn Primarolo: In October 2000, the Inland Revenue introduced the dedicated Hotline numbers for queries from MPs and members of the devolved assemblies about working families' tax credit and disabled person's tax credit. For the remainder of the 2000–2001 financial year, there were 234 calls to the Hotline. In the 2001–2002 financial year there were 418 calls. Between April 2002 and early March 2003, there have been 314 calls. Advisers on the Hotline also carry out a range of other customer service duties, and so it is not possible to isolate the cost of the Hotlines.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many calls were received by the working families' tax credit and disabled person's tax credit public telephone line in each year since its creation; and what the cost of the line has been in each year. [103520]

Dawn Primarolo: The schedule below gives details of the number of calls answered by the WFTC and DPTC helplines since they first opened.

	WFTC Oct 1999 to Dec 1999	WFTC Jan 2000 to Dec 2000	WFTC Jan 2001 to Dec 2001	WFTC Jan 2002 to Dec 2002	WFTC Jan 2003 to date
Answered	1,037,915	6,115,528	5,882,380	6,060,443	813,187

	DPTC Oct 1999 to Dec 1999	DPTC Jan 2000 to Dec 2000	DPTC Jan 2001 to Dec 2001	DPTC Jan 2002 to Dec 2002	DPTC Jan 2003—to date
Answered	35,935	207,946	227,568	232,389	39,356

An estimate of the staffing cost of the line in each year is given in the table.

Period	£000s
1/10/99 to 31/3/00	1,406
1/4/00 to 31/3/01	6,511
1/4/01 to 31/3/02	7,776
1/4/02 to 28/2/03	7,223

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much his Department is spending on advertising the new (a) child tax credit and (b) working tax credit, with particular reference to (i) television advertising, (ii) radio advertising, (iii) leaflets, (iv) factsheets, (v) claim packs and (vi) A3 posters. [103526]

Dawn Primarolo: Spending on the promotional campaign for the new tax credits is currently estimated as follows: (i) media costs for:

	(£000s)
Television advertisements	8,016
Media costs for radio advertisements	876
Leaflets	642
Factsheets	No costs to date
A3 posters	21
The cost of producing claim packs is estimated at:	4,031,000

All estimated costs include VAT. Postage costs are not included.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the take-up rate of the new (a) child tax credit and (b) working tax credit. [103527]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 19 March 2003, Official Report, column 760W.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what means childless people have been alerted to their possible entitlement to claim working tax credit. [94020]

Dawn Primarolo: The new tax credits—Working Tax Credit and Child Tax Credit—are introduced in April. A high-profile publicity campaign has been running since last autumn to alert people to their entitlement and to encourage them to claim. The campaign has so far included national television advertising, national and local radio advertising, adverts in the national press as well as on-line publicity. Treasury ministers led a series of roadshows across the United Kingdom in September and October. Leaflets and posters have been produced and are being made widely available. The Inland Revenue is also piloting new ways of working with local community groups to maximise take-up. At the same time Jobcentre Plus offices are making sure their clients are aware of the help they can get, through the Working Tax Credit, as they move into work.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court of Protection (Portfolio Holdings)

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the average change was in the value of portfolio holdings held by the Court of Protection for minors, over the last four years. [103168]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Public Guardianship Office (PGO), is the administrative arm of the Court of Protection. It does not maintain detailed historic records of individual investment portfolios. Individual clients' investments are managed by private fund managers—either a panel broker under contract with the PGO, or of the clients' choosing. Brokers hold individual records but do not distinguish between minors and clients.

It could be expected that on average, investment return from equity markets would have been broadly similar to that of the market generally. Over the past four years, the FTSE All Share Index fell from 2825.39 (end of February 1999) to 1731.50 (end of February 2003), a decline of 39 per cent. The performance of individual cases varies according to investments held.

All of the minors have a proportion of their funds retained in the Special Account, a cash deposit account operated by the Court Funds Office, which pays a favourable rate of interest, currently 6 per cent.

European Court of Human Rights

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans she has to make representations to the Council of Europe to secure an amendment to the European Court of Human Rights rules of procedure to the effect that detailed reasons for its decisions declaring cases inadmissible in committee are given. [103281]

Ms Rosie Winterton: None. Whether reasons are given is a matter for the Court. The Court has ceased to write explanatory letters in these circumstances as part of its attempts to streamline its procedures in order to deal with its backlog of cases (35,000, and rising at the rate of 1,000 per month). Cases declared inadmissible by a Committee of three judges are often vexatious and clear-cut.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Departmental Website

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council what the total cost of the Privy Council's website was in the last 12 months; and how many hits it received in the same period. [104200]

Mr. Bradshaw: My right hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) announced the relaunch of the Department's website (www.pco.gov.uk) on 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 453W.

The costs including development and design for the site since relaunch are £49,293.63. Costs prior to this date are not available but were negligible, since the design and content were produced in-house and not charged separately.

Information on the number of hits is as follows:

Number of hits	March 2002–03
Unique visitors	232,805

Since relaunch there has been a fourfold increase in the number of unique visitors and a twofold one in the number of page impressions.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Household Incomes

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average household income is in each constituency. [100405]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available.

Zoo-keepers

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many zoo-keepers have been (a) injured and (b) killed by elephants in (i) zoos and (ii) safari parks in each year since 1973. [102731]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information requested is not available. The Health and Safety Executive's computer systems do not record information from statutory injury notifications at this level of detail.

Adult Disadvantage

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) pursuant to the answer of 4 December 2002, Official Report, column 918W, on adult disadvantage, if he will re-calculate the figures to include retirement on 31 December 2002; [97848]

(2) if he will update the three tables to include figures for retirement on 31 December 2002. [99334]

Mr. McCartney: The information requested is in the following tables.

In the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 4 December, Official Report, column 918W, data in the final column was in 2000 earnings terms, but was mis-labelled as being in 2001 earnings terms. The column heading has now been corrected. Also, the table headings have been revised so as to, in each case, correctly describe the contents in the tables.

Table 1, includes the data underlying the graph on page 19 of "Modernising Annuities" published by Inland Revenue and the Department for Work and Pensions in February, 2001. Although a stylised model, it is the data in this table that we believe best characterises the investment strategy of many pension funds.

Given recent falls in the stock markets, table 3 (funds invested 100 per cent. in equities in all years) shows the largest fall in pension income when comparing the results for 2001 with 2002. However, it is highly unlikely that an individual fund will actually follow this particular investment strategy.

Investors will also be interested in expected pension income throughout their retirement and not just the income in the first year. The information does not give an indication of how this first figure may have increased for successive cohorts of pensioners due to increased life expectancy.

Some of the results for 2001 are marginally different to those presented in my previous answer. This is because the FTSE 30 and gilts indices for 2001 have since been revised.

The assumptions involved in the current model are the same as those in my previous answer, and re-stated as follows:

A person contributes to a pension fund for 31 years;

Contributions are made at 10 per cent. of gross earnings;

Earnings in each year are £20,000 in 2000 earnings terms. The earnings growth index was supplied by the Office for National Statistics;

50 per cent. of each year's contributions are made at the start of each year and 50 per cent. at the end of each year;

The return on equities is in line with the FTSE 30. The same figures were used in the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 387, to enable consistency with that answer. The use of the FTSE 30 price index, however, may underestimate the returns on investing in equities, as this index takes account of capital gains/losses but excludes dividend payments.

The return on gilts is in line with the Barclays Capital Total Return Index. The same figures were used in the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 387, to enable consistency with that answer.

A 1 per cent. fee is deducted at the end of each year

Upon retirement on 31 December of the given year, an annuity is purchased at the prevailing rate in that year, and as indicated in the tables. The source of this is Annuity Direct.

Benefit Payment

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what plans he has to publish the Office of Government Commerce gateway review into the transfer of benefit payments to automated credit transfer; [91290]

(2) when the Office of Government Commerce follow-up gateway review into the transfer of benefit payments to automated credit transfer will be completed; and what plans he has to publish the results. [91291]

Malcolm Wicks: The Office of Government Commerce issued the results of the April 2002 review into the transfer of benefit payments to payment direct into bank and building society accounts to the Department in May 2002.

The follow-up gateway review is provisionally scheduled for April 2003, one year after the original review, the results of which will again be issued to the Department.

Further dissemination of the review is subject to the Code of Practice on Access to Official Information.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps he is taking to ensure that financial advice is available to those persuaded to open bank accounts for the first time by the changes in benefit and pension distribution through the Post Office. [101438]

Malcolm Wicks: Government Departments and the Post Office will provide customers with full factual information about their banking options but are not qualified to and must not advise customers on which account is most suitable. It is for customers to choose which account best meets their needs and circumstances. Customers who are having difficulty deciding which account is best for them can seek advice from independent organisations.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many benefit claimants have migrated from direct payment to automated credit transfer in each month since January 2002, broken down into recipients of each major benefit. [102985]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested.

Such information, as is available on the number of accounts that have migrated from paper based methods of payment to direct payment into a bank or building society account in each month since January 2002, is shown in the following table.

The figures compare information available at one date to the next, and are only available from 15 June 2002.

Some benefit data are received less frequently than four weekly.

Where there are no figures, these will be included in the next period for which figures are shown, as the calculation cannot be done until the data is received.

People in receipt of more than one benefit may have those benefits combined to a single benefit account. Figures are in terms of these accounts.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions under what circumstances follow-up phone calls are made by his Department to benefit recipients who opt not to receive payment by automated credit transfer into a bank account; how many such calls have so far been made; how many individuals have opted for ACT in response to such calls; how many staff are employed making calls, and at what cost to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [104001]

Malcolm Wicks: We are not currently re-contacting customers who have received letters inviting them to move to direct payment and have responded to opt not to be paid this way. We are, however, following up the invitation letters where customers have not responded. In some cases this is by a follow-up telephone call as part of the work undertaken by the Direct Payment Centre. This centre currently employs around 190 staff. Up until 17 March, 122,704 follow up calls have been made.

The Department set up the Direct Payment Centre to handle the conversion to direct payment. This is a managed service that deals with telephone calls, the distribution of invitation letters and the collation of information when customers details are received. We can therefore not differentiate between these functions to provide costings.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2003, Official Report, columns 761–62W, if he will place in the Library copies of information sent from his Department to benefit recipients. [101289]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 6 November 2003, Official Report, column 406W. The latest version of the information will be issued from 1 April and will be placed in the Library thereafter.

Benefit Payment

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people collect benefits from post offices in (a) Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) the North East and (d) the UK. [103559]

Malcolm Wicks: Information available on the number of people that receive benefits by a method of payment collectable from post offices as at 25 January 2003 is in the table. Included in these figures are customers paid by Girocheque. Girocheques are encashable either at a post office or they can be paid into a bank or building society account.

Some customers who are paid direct into an account can also collect their benefit in cash at post offices through network banking arrangements at the post office. There are no data available on the number of benefit claims collected in this way.

	Total benefit recipients	Payable at post offices
Jarrow constituency	35,911	26,511
South Tyneside	68,886	51,931
North East	1,073,900	747,964
Great Britain	21,641,051	12,456,733

1. People in receipt of more than one benefit may have those benefits combined to a single benefit account. Figures are in terms of these accounts.
2. Figures for Great Britain are for England, Scotland and Wales. Information for Northern Ireland is a matter for the Northern Ireland Office.
3. The 'Payable at post offices' column represents customers who have their benefit paid either entirely by paper method, or at least one of their benefits is by paper if they are receiving a combination of benefits and some are being paid direct.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what steps he has taken to inform benefit claimants to be affected by the change in payment method about the steps needed to register for a post office card account; [103510]

(2) what arrangements are in place to cater for benefit or pension recipients who do not specify their preferred payment method at the end of the changeover to the new payment system. [103511]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department is mailing customers affected individually to inform them of the move to Direct Payment. This activity began in October 2002 with mailings to Child Benefit and War Pension customers. In addition to this we are planning to run national and regional press advertising this month and plan further advertising from May onwards. This aims to educate our customers about what is changing, the options they have and the action they should take. It will be up to the individual to decide what the best option for their circumstances will be.

It has always been recognised that there will be a small number of people who will not be able to be paid directly into an account. We are currently exploring alternative ways in which these customers could receive their money.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many benefit claimants in (a) each region and (b) each local authority have opted to collect their benefit payments using (i) post office card accounts, (ii) basic bank accounts and (c) current bank accounts. [103512]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested.

Information that is available shows that as at 28 February 2003, over 447,226 customers have responded to our letters and opted for payment into a bank or building society account. This is made up of 393,847 child benefit customers, 51,806 veterans agency customers and 1,573 pensions customers.

As at 28 February 2003, 1,218,916 customer invitation letters have been issued. From the invitation letters issued 90,711 customers have responded with a request for a Post Office card account.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in (a) Essex and (b) the West Chelmsford constituency collect benefits from Post Offices. [103124]

Malcolm Wicks: Information available on pensioners as at 25 January 2003 in (a) Essex and (b) West Chelmsford constituency receiving their benefits by a method of payment collectable at Post Office is shown in the following table. Included in these figures are customers paid by Girocheque. Girocheques are encashable either at a post office or they can be paid into a bank or building society account.

	Number
Essex	122,192
West Chelmsford	7,621

Some customers who are paid direct into an account can also collect their benefit in cash at Post Offices through the network banking arrangements at the Post Office. There is no data available on the number of benefit claims collected this way.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in (a) Essex and (b) the West Chelmsford constituency have migrated from over the counter benefit payments to direct bank transfers in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [103125]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested.

Such information as is available on pensioners as at 25 January 2003 in (a) Essex and (b) West Chelmsford constituency, that have migrated to receiving at least one type of benefit, from payments collectable at post offices to payment into a bank or building society account, is shown in the table. The figures are a comparison between those of 25 January and the same records approximately 12 weeks earlier. Included in these figures are customers paid by Girocheque. Girocheques are encashable either at a post office, or they can be paid into a bank or building society account.

	Number of pensioners
Essex	1,317
West Chelmsford	76

Some customers who are paid direct into an account can also collect their benefit in cash at post offices through network banking arrangements at the Post Office. There is no data available on the number of benefit claims collected this way.

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps have been taken to promote the use of (a) a Post Office card account, (b) a current account and (c) a basic account for receiving benefit payments following the introduction of ACT; and if he will make a statement. [103801]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 662W.

Benefits Agency

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of claims made to the Benefits Agency were delayed because of papers lost or mislaid by the Agency in the last year for which figures are available. [88534]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information requested is not available.

In April 2002, we launched Jobcentre Plus and the Pensions Service, replacing the Benefits Agency. The Department and its Agencies are committed to providing a high level of customer service and have published customer charters setting out the level of service that customers can expect to receive.

Both Agencies treat all post and claim forms as confidential items taking all necessary action resulting from that post, both promptly and accurately. If a customer reports that an item of post has not been actioned, Agency staff will check to ensure that it has not been misplaced within the office. If a claim to benefit is delayed because the Agencies have lost forms or papers they will make every effort to ensure that the customer does not suffer unduly by rectifying the situation as quickly as possible. In a case of maladministration where a customer suffers financial loss, stress or is put to additional inconvenience, the Agencies can, in addition, make financial redress through our special payments schemes.

Business Bureaucracy

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the forms that his Department requires private sector businesses to complete and return. [98090]

Malcolm Wicks: A list of forms that the Department for Work and Pensions, including the Health and Safety Executive requires private sector business to complete has been placed in the Library. This list excludes forms used with contracted providers, and those providing professional services, such as general practitioners, building societies and banks.

The Government's aim is to eliminate unnecessary regulation, and to minimise the burdens imposed by regulation. It is committed to reducing, wherever possible, existing regulatory burdens, and to minimising the impact on business of any new legislation.

Pensions Consul[illegible]n

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when and where the West Midland Regional DWP consultation meeting [illegible]eduled for 3 April will take place; who may atten[illegible] and if he will make a statement. [104058]

Mr. McCartney: The Government are conducting the largest consultation ever mounted on pensions issues. To ensure the widest possible range of views are sought they have established a partnership with Age Concern and the Co-operative Insurance Society to consult on the proposals in the Pensions Green Paper, "Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement", Cm 5677. The aim of this tier of consultation is to reach individuals, groups and organisations that may not ordinarily have the opportunity to air their views direct to Ministers. A series of consultation events will take place, one in each of the Government Office Regions in England, one in Wales and one in Scotland.

Arrangements for the whole series of meetings have yet to be finalised. However the event for the West Midlands GOR will be held on 3 April at the Copthorne Merry Hotel in Dudley. Attendance is by invitation only.

Age Concern and CIS will identify and issue invitations to people in the following groups. Some invitations for the West Midlands event have already been issued.

Domestic Violence

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what financial support is available for spouses and their dependants who are seeking exceptional leave to remain on the basis of the domestic violence concession. [96889]

Malcolm Wicks: Provided that the Home Office is satisfied that a marriage has broken down due to domestic violence, it can apply a concession to the immigration rules (during the probationary one-year period), giving the victim indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom. This provision allows victims of domestic violence to claim social security benefits.

Employers Liability Insurance

Mr. Bailey: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of responses to the consultation on employers liability insurance; and if he will make a statement. [102897]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I refer my hon. Friend to the written ministerial statement I gave on 12 December 2002, Official Report, columns 23–24WS. The Department is in the process of assessing the responses to the consultation undertaken as part of the review of Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance which is due to report in the spring.

Incomes (Blackpool, North and Fleetwood)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average income is in the constituency of Blackpool, North and Fleetwood. [98677]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information is not available. Information on average income is available at a national level from the Department's Family Resources Survey but sample sizes and other limitations mean that the information cannot be regarded as robust at regional and sub-regional level.

IT Contracts

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list IT contracts in his Department and its predecessors above £50 million in each of the last 10 years; what the inception date for each system was; when it became fully functional; when it became fully debugged; and what the cost of over-runs has been. [99003]

Mr. McCartney: The information is as follows:

1. Contract: Modernising Employment Service. Employment Services outsourcing its IT work in a partnership agreement with Electronic Data Systems (EDS). This agreement was revised to reflect major new investment in IT and telephony to improve services for jobless people and employers in the Modernising Employment Service (MES) Project.

Inception Dates: August 1998—original outsourcing: October 2000—MES.

Dates fully functional: August 1998

Cost over-runs: None.

2. Contract: ACCORD Strategic Outsourcing Business Allocation (SOBA). The Department of Social Security awarded a contract to outsource all its IT provision. This contract also encompasses business outsourced previously in 1995 under Focus 95 arrangements, and is concerned with the maintenance, development and operation of the Department's existing IT systems.

Inception Date: 8 August 2000.

Date Fully Functional: 1 September 2000

Cost over-runs: None.

3. Contract: Child Support Reforms (CSR). The Department of Social Security awarded the contract, to provide new IT systems in support of the Child Support Agency. From 27 January 2003, new child support claims have been processed on existing rules. Processing claims on new rules is scheduled to begin on 3 March 2003, consequently the system is not yet fully operational.

Inception Date: 8 August 2000.

Date Fully Functional: 27 January 2003

Cost over-runs: The amount the Department will pay has risen by around 7 per cent. over the term of the contract.

4. Contract: Early Office Infrastructure (EOI). These are a series of contracts to replace the desktops and associated equipment for the Departments employees and eventually the support arrangements for that kit. Two contracts of over £50 million have been awarded to date.

i) Mobilisation contract to build the infrastructure for the support.

Inception Date: January 2001.

Date Fully Functional: This is an IT service contract, not an IT development contract. There have been a number of contact changes to build volumes and functionality

Cost over-runs: Unable to identify any true cost over-runs at this stage as project not complete.

ii) Rollout contract to manage the implementation of the kit and associated equipment.

Inception Date: July 2001.

Date fully functional: This is an IT service contract, not an IT development contract. The original contract has been subject to extension.

Cost over-runs: Unable to identify any true cost over-runs at this stage as project not complete.

5. Contract: New Tax Credits (NTC). The contract is for the delivery of new and amended DWP IT to enable joint working with the Inland Revenue on NTC and to reflect the changes in benefit rules resulting from the introduction of NTC.

Inception Date: 13 December 2002.

Date Fully Functional: Expected to be fully functional on 7 April 2003.

Cost over-runs: None

6. Contract: Lots B, C and D. These outsourcing contracts let for support and implementation of Office Services to SEMA Group UK Ltd. (Lots B and C) and International Computers Ltd.

Inception Date: 14 June 1995. Contracts transferred to BT Arcway on 24 August 2000 under the ACCORD framework.

Date fully functional: 14 June 1995. These are IT service contracts, not IT development therefore no formal date for acceptance testing.

Cost over-runs: None.

7. Contract: NOSP WAN. The Wide Area Network business allocation via BT provides network access to the former DSS estate.

Inception Date: 23 November 2000

Date fully functional: Ongoing

Cost over-runs: None.

The information relates to contractual arrangements made by the Department for Work and Pensions, the former Employment Services and the former Department for Social Security.

On the question of "debugging", the view is that no IT system is completely free from "bugs". However, the Department deals with these according to priority, working in partnership with private sector providers to eradicate on an ongoing basis.

A list of IT contracts current at the time of Focus 95 outsourcing is available in the Library. Information prior to 1995 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of expenditure on the minimum income guarantee if there is (a) 100 per cent., (b) 95 per cent., (c) 90 per cent. and (d) 85 per cent. take-up of the scheme. [102590]

Mr. McCartney: Expenditure on the minimum income guarantee for 2002–03 is expected to be around £4.5 billion. This reflects the current number of MIG recipients recorded in administrative data and any fluctuations expected throughout the financial year.

The Department does not produce forecasts of expenditure on the basis of different levels of take-up. An indication of the likely expenditure under different levels of take-up can be estimated using the Department's publication "Income-Related Benefits Estimates of Take-up in 1999–2000". This shows expenditure take-up of the MIG for 1999–2000 to be in the range of 74 per cent. to 86 per cent.

Based on the midpoint of this range, and on the strong assumption that recent levels of expenditure take-up continue into the future, the table below provides an estimate of likely MIG expenditure under different levels of take-up. There is likely to be a wide margin of error around these estimates and they should only be used to provide an indication of the likely effect.

Estimated MIG expenditure under different levels of take-up

Expenditure take-up level	Estimated MIG expenditure (£ billion)
100 per cent.	5.6
95 per cent.	5.3
90 per cent.	5.1
85 per cent.	4.8

Notes:

1. The assumption has been made that the take-up levels requested relate to expenditure levels and not the case load level.
2. All figures are rounded to the nearest £100 million.
3. Expenditure for 2002–03 is based on PBR 2002 forecasts.

New Deal (Fraud)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what has been the (a) average annual and (b) total level of (i) erroneous payments and (ii) fraud connected with the New Deal to date; how much of this money has been recovered; and if he will make a statement. [88053]

Malcolm Wicks [holding answer 19 December 2002]: Since the inception of the New Deals, all allegations of fraud have been followed up and fully investigated if the circumstances warranted it. Information on the level of erroneous payments is recorded by benefit, not by programme. Similarly, the level of fraud committed by participants in the New Deal is recorded by benefit, not by programme. However, in 1998 we established the Jobcentre Plus Contractor and Programme Investigation Unit, as part of the Counter Fraud Investigation Division. The unit's work includes the investigation of all allegations of fraud committed by contractors under the New Deal. The available information is in the table.

Allegations of fraud committed by contractors engaged through the New Deal, April 1998 to November 2002

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	April-November 2002	Totals
Number of allegations	165	283	570	390	461	1,869
Number that went to full investigation	Not available	Not available	62	99	117	278
Estimated loss (£)	Not available	Not available	520,206.25	1,030,894.17	233,471.09	1,784,571.51

Notes:

1. Information on the number of allegations that went to full investigation and on the estimated loss for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.
2. The information concerning recovery of this money is not available.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if her Department will make contingency plans in the case of a shortfall in an occupational pension scheme to prevent a UK subsidiary of an overseas group abandoning the scheme and not meeting any funding shortfall. [103393]

Mr. McCartney: Provisions already exist to prevent companies from abandoning and not meeting any funding shortfall in occupational pension schemes. If a salary-related pension scheme is operating with tax approval, and is subject to the Minimum Funding Requirement (MFR), then a wide range of requirements under the Pensions Act 1995 apply to that scheme. This includes the funding of the scheme as determined by the MFR, and the requirement to maintain a schedule of contributions. The Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra) has the power to sanction scheme managers or trustees who fail to take reasonable steps to comply with these requirements.

Also, legislation provides that when a salary-related scheme winds up, or a sponsoring employer becomes insolvent, any deficiency in the pension fund becomes a debt on the employer. This provides a mechanism for the trustees to be able to take action to pursue the debt.

The pensions Green Paper, ' Simplicity, Security and Choice: Working and Saving for Retirement', Cm 5677, published on 17 December, discusses two options (the full buy-out option and the partial buy-out option) for changes to the debt on the employer provisions that might result in more funds being put into a scheme when a solvent employer chooses to wind it up. This would strengthen protection for scheme members, however this needs to be balanced against the costs on employers.

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what guidance he gives on protection for members of occupational pension schemes operated by companies whose parent company is listed overseas. [103396]

Mr. McCartney: The Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra) produces guides to help pension scheme trustees understand some of the legal and technical issues involving pensions law. It also provides fact sheets for members of occupational pension schemes.

If a salary-related pension scheme is operating with tax approval, and is subject to the Minimum Funding Requirement (MFR), then a wide range of requirements under the Pensions Act 1995 apply to that scheme. This includes the funding of the scheme as determined by the MFR, the requirement to maintain a schedule of contributions and, when a salary-related scheme winds up, or a sponsoring employer becomes insolvent, any deficiency in the pension fund becomes a debt on the employer. That fact that the parent company of the principal employer sponsoring the pension scheme may be listed overseas is therefore not directly relevant.

The protection that people receive if their pension scheme is wound up is important, and we need to do more to protect the rights of scheme members. That is why we are consulting on proposals within the pensions Green Paper 'Simplicity, Security and Choice: Working and Saving for Retirement', published on 17 December, aimed at improving protection for scheme members on wind up. This includes proposals to share out scheme assets more fairly, introduce some form of insurance and strengthen protection for members whose solvent employer chooses to wind up its scheme.

We are consulting on our Green Paper, 'Simplicity, Security and Choice: Working and Saving for Retirement', Cm 5677 at the moment, and the consultation period runs until 28 March 2003.

Parliamentary Questions

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will answer written questions (a) 97909 and (b) 97910 of 12 February tabled by the hon. Member for Perth. [104020]

Mr. McCartney: Answers were given to the hon. Member on 19 March.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent assessment he has made of the effects on workers of passive smoking in the workplace. [99358]

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans the Government have to assess the number of workers exposed to second hand smoke in the workplace. [99982]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Research by the Department of Health's Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health (SCOTH) into the general effects of exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is continuing.

The results of a survey on smoking behaviour and attitudes, undertaken by the Office for National Statistics in 2002, are due to be published on behalf of the Department of Health this summer.

Pensioners

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of total public expenditure has been spent on (a) retirement pensions, (b) winter fuel payments, (c) means-tested benefits for pensioners, (d) other benefits for pensioners and (e) free television licences in each year since 1992–93. [102988]

Mr. McCartney: The information required is given in the table.

Percentage of Total Managed Expenditure	Retirement pensions[1]	Winter fuel payments	Income related benefits[2]	Other benefits[3]	Over 75 TV licence
1992–93	10.31		2.05	0.05

2002–03[4]	10.64	0.41	1.98	0.03	0.09

[1] Includes pension age expenditure on widows/bereavement benefits; Severe disablement allowance; and invalidity/incapacity benefit (prior to 2001–02).

[2] Income related benefits include the minimum income guarantee and housing benefit and council tax benefit paid to people aged 60 or over.

[3] Other benefits comprise Christmas bonus (contributory and non-contributory).

[4] Based on forecast expenditure.

Notes:

Percentages have been calculated using total managed expenditure, which includes Government departmental expenditure limits and annually managed expenditure, based on pre-Budget report 2002 figures. Apart from benefits mentioned in note [1] contains no data relating to expenditure on disability benefits.

Pensions Commission

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many times the pensions commission had met by the latest date for which he has information. [102556]

Mr. McCartney: As of 11 March, the pensions commission has met twice.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans Ministers in the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make ministerial announcements in April. [103664]

Mr. McCartney: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

Sign Language

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if his Department will make it its policy to ensure that its contract with SchlumbergerSema requires that only registered qualified sign language interpreters are used at medical examinations when making an assessment of sign language users. [103105]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: SchlumbergerSema Medical Services' current procedures adhere to the principle that the provision of interpreters is a customer led one.

Therefore customers are given the option of either requesting a sign language interpreter or arranging for a friend or family member to interpret or sign for them.

In the event that a customer elects for Medical Services to provide a Sign Language Interpreter, Medical Services' policy is to arrange for provision of a Qualified Signer to be obtained through the RNID helpline.

The Department has no current plans to review this requirement.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what contractual (a) obligations and (b) targets his Department has placed on SchlumbergerSema medical services for providing sign language interpreters for medical examinations; and if he will make a statement. [102901]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 14 March 2003]: The contract between the Department and SchlumbergerSema Medical Services defines deafness as a "Special Need" and specifies the following:

> SchlumbergerSema Medical Services shall comply with any reasonable request to accommodate claimants who have special needs
> When a special need is identified on the day of the examination appointment and the special need cannot be reasonably accommodated, SchlumbergerSema Medical Services shall use reasonable endeavours to ensure that an alternative appointment is arranged within 24 hours of the special need being identified and shall ensure that the claimant's special needs will be accommodated at the new appointment.
> The target that the Department has set for SchlumbergerSema Medical Services in relation to special needs is that 95 per cent. of claimant's requirements will be met.

Social Fund

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether he intends to (a) increase the Social Fund budget and (b) make other changes to the Social Fund, to cover potential cashflow problems for benefit claimants as they move to automated credit transfer. [100794]

Malcolm Wicks: On 27 November we announced that from April 2003, £90 million will be added to the discretionary Social Fund over the three years to 2005–06. This extra investment will enhance the Fund's ability to help those on low incomes manage their finances.

The size of the gross national Social Fund budget, set at 1 April each year, is dependent on forecasts of the level of Social Fund loan recovery in the coming year. We will announce the 2003/04 budget once we are able to finalise details based on this forecast.

The move to Direct Payment will be phased in over a two year period from April 2003. No changes are being made to benefit payment frequencies so that anyone currently receiving their benefit weekly can continue to do so when they move to Direct Payment. We do not anticipate any increase in Social Fund crisis loan applications because of Direct Payment and therefore have no plans to make any changes to the Social Fund.

Special Advisers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers have been employed by his Department in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and at what cost in each year. [92476]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) on 23 July 2002, Official Report, column 1038.

The Department for Work and Pensions was formed on 8 June 2001 from parts of the former Department of Social Security, parts of the former Department for Education and Employment and the Employment service. Information on costs for 1994 to 2001 is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Department currently employs 16 (£1,065,233) press officers. A further 13 (£671,702) press officers work in the regions (England, Scotland and Wales) providing specific advice on local services that are now being rolled out.

Last year the Department employed 21 press officers at a cost of £816,725. The cost for 2002–03 is a forecast spend for the whole year and includes the total staff costs in press office and regional network, including admin. staff.

Targeting Fraud Campaign

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much the targeting fraud campaign has cost, broken down into expenditure on (a) the television and radio campaign, (b) advertising in the press, (c) evaluation of the campaign, (d) the website and (e) other costs. [102987]

Malcolm Wicks: The most recent Targeting Fraud advertising campaign took place between September 2001 and March 2002. The costs break down as follows:

Violence at Work

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures have been introduced to reduce violence at work. [103560]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) is committed to tackling the problem of work-related violence. In March 2000, HSC agreed a three-year programme to help reduce the number of incidents of violence at work. So far the programme has resulted in the publication of new guidance specifically aimed at small businesses; the development of new National Occupational Standards on work-related violence; a programme of inspections in the health care sector; new research to establish good practice for lone workers; and a major conference run jointly by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and the TUC to help raise awareness of violence in the workplace.

HSE has published general guidance for employers to help them tackle work-related violence, in accordance with their duties under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. HSE has also published sector-specific guidance covering health services, education, retail, banks and building societies.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Accountancy Services

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total cost to his Department was for accountancy services in 2002. [101565]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created on 29 May 2002. Between that date and the end of 2002 the amount spent on accountancy services was £359,000.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many people are employed in (a) the devolution and English regions division and (b) the international and policy division of the central policy group; what the cost of each was in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [99887]

(2) if he will make a statement on the purposes of the Deputy Prime Minister's Central Policy Group; how many people there are in the Group; and where it is based. [99886]

Mr. Leslie: The Devolution and Constitution Division and the International and Central Policy Divisions form part of the Central Strategy and Resources Directorate in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. A total of 24 people are employed and are based in 26 Whitehall. From July 2001 to June 2002 they formed the Deputy Prime Minister's Central Policy Group in the Cabinet Office. The Devolution and Constitution Division oversees the relationship between the UK Government and the Devolved Administrations; the International and Central Policy Division works across the Department on a range of international, regional and domestic policies, and a number of corporate issues, and provides advice to my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister and other Ministers and officials.

In their current form the divisions have only been in operation since the creation of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in May 2002. Therefore there are no comparative figures yet available which cover a full financial year.

Firefighters' Dispute

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Fire Brigades Union on the effects of fire strikes on the training and readiness of HM Armed Forces for military operations. [103999]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has met the Fire Brigades Union on a number occasions to discuss a variety of topics since the dispute began. He has made it clear that, while the Armed Forces have been, and continue to be, able to provide emergency cover, this has had an impact on their usual duties.

Government Initiatives

Mr. Maude: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which central government schemes and initiatives since 1997 have required the formation of partnerships with local government to implement them. [103730]

Mr. Leslie: The Government are committed to working in partnership with local government in the development and implementation of policy, a principle enshrined in the Framework for Partnership agreed with the Local Government Association. Accordingly, partnerships with authorities of many different kinds have been involved in the implementation of a wide range of Government policies. The specific information requested could, however, be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Industrial Action

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many working days were lost owing to industrial action by staff in (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in 2002. [101507]

Mr. Leslie: There have been no working days lost by staff in 2002 as a result of industrial action in either the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, its agencies or non-departmental public bodies

Local Government Grant Settlement

Harry Cohen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 6 March 2003, Official Report, column 1202W, on the local government grant settlement, if he will list the specific and special grants to which he refers; which of them are ringfenced; what amount in cash terms is available for distribution to (a) local authorities and (b) other organisations for each; when he plans for bids to be submitted to him for a share of each grant; and if he will make a statement. [103323]

Mr. Raynsford: The following table gives up-to-date details of specific and special grants announced for 2003–04. Some grants are bid for and successful bids receive allocations. The majority are allocated to all qualifying authorities by a formula or on an agreed basis. The definition of ring-fencing was updated last year to reflect the types of grant which now exist. Some grants previously classified as ring-fenced are not now classified in this way. The key distinction made remains that ring-fenced grants are those which restrict local authority spending. For completeness the following list includes all special grants inside Aggregate External Finance. Further details of classifications are in an annex to the freedoms and flexibilities announcement of 26 November. Under the terms of the freedoms and flexibilities announcement, from 2003–04, the majority of the grants in the following table are unfenced for excellent performers. Exceptions include those grants which must be passed to schools, and the supporting people grant, where in view of the legislative requirements, different arrangements are in place for removing ring-fencing for excellent performers.

Departmental Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many times since 2001 he has taken flights within his departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied him on each trip. [95382]

Mr. Leslie: Since 2001 my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has taken three scheduled business class UK flights. one accompanied by one person, another accompanied by two people and the third accompanied by three people. During this period he has taken one chartered helicopter flight accompanied by five people.

All travel was undertaken in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many overseas trips were undertaken by him and other Ministers since May 2001 itinerary, which officials and dignitaries they met; and what the itinerary was of each visit; [83421]

(2) how many regional visits within the United Kingdom were undertaken by him and other ministers since May 2001; and how many times he has visited (a) Wales and (b) Scotland since May 2001. [83422]

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the overseas trips made by himself and other members of his ministerial team in 2002; and what the (a) purpose and (b) cost was in each case. [101489]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) to the Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on progress in his international work; and what overseas visits he made in the last 12 months. [99888]

Mr. Leslie: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister chaired the cabinet committee which prepared the UK's position for the world summit on sustainable development in South Africa and held a number of important bilateral meetings in connection with the summit. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister also continues to undertake international work on behalf of the Prime Minister, and has held a number of meetings with visiting Ministers in London.

In addition to his attendance at the summit in South Africa, right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has also visited Canada, Brazil, China, India, Denmark and Japan.

Social Housing Grant

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister for what reason his Department did not communicate directly with local authorities likely to be affected by the decision to abolish local authority social housing grant from 1 April, prior to the publication of the ministerial statement on 5 March. [102754]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister consulted local authorities on the principle of abolishing local authority social housing grant last autumn. In the light of work on the communities plan, we decided to make this reform quickly—provided transitional arrangements were in place to ensure that well-advanced, good quality schemes were able to go ahead.

In addition to two letters circulated to all local authorities in England outlining our decision, officials of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister held three face-to-face meetings with local authority representatives in February to discuss transitional funding.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the number of social housing schemes which will not proceed as a result of the abolition of the local authority social housing grant. [103263]

Mr. McNulty: In my statement of 5 March I announced increased provision for transitional arrangements for local authority social housing grant (LASHG). Transitional funding will now support investment in social housing of up to £550 million—£50 million more than we provided in 2002–03 from LASHG, and higher than in any previous year. The number of affordable homes to be built in 2003–04 using this funding will not be known until after 30 June 2003, which is the deadline for both with-debt and debt-free authorities to submit new schemes for 2003–04 to the Housing Corporation.

Standards Board for England

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the annual budget is of the Standards Board for England. [101221]

Mr. Leslie: The annual budget of the Standards Board for 2002–03 is £7.9 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Offences

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have been detained by the Police Service of Northern Ireland on immigration offences at (a) Belfast port and (b) Larne port. [103269]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration Service does not routinely collect the information requested. A check of information which is held by Immigration Service would be time consuming and disproportionately expensive and would not, in any event, represent the full total of police arrests since a proportion of these may have originated, and have been recorded, as matters not related to immigration offences.

Ashfield Young Offenders Institution

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of raising the standards of Ashfield YOI to meet the requirements of PSO4950; and if he will make a statement; [103155]

(2) what offending behaviour programmes are available to prisoners at Ashfield YOI; and if he will make a statement; [103163]

(3) what the capacity of Ashfield Young Offenders Institution is; and how many (a) young offenders and (b) juveniles are held there; [103156]

(4) what the timetable is for removing juveniles from Ashfield YOI; [103161]

(5) what plans he has to ensure that a resettlement strategy based upon the needs of juveniles and young offenders is put in place at (a) Ashfield Young Offenders Institution and (b) other YOIs, as recommended in the recent inspection report into Ashfield YOI; [103162]

(6) what special arrangements are in place to accommodate juveniles who have been or will be transferred out of Ashfield YOI following the recent inspection report; [103154]

(7) how many juveniles have been transferred out of Ashfield YOI following the recent inspection report; and to which institutions they were transferred; [103153]

(8) what action he is taking to ensure that the levels of purposeful activity at Ashfield YOI meet the minimum levels specified by the Youth Justice Board and Prison Service Order 4950; [103158]

(9) whether a time-tabled action plan has been put in place to fulfil the recommendations of the recent inspectorate report into Ashfield YOI; and if he will make a statement; [103160]

(10) what plans he has to ensure that (a) a written drug strategy and (b) a drug strategy group are put in place at (i) Ashfield Young Offenders Institution and (b) other YOIs which do not have them; [103164]

(11) what action he has taken following the inspection report into Ashfield YOI to ensure that (a) there are adequate staffing levels, (b) reception staff are trained in suicide prevention measures, (c) cells are allocated on the basis of risk assessments and (d) an anti-bullying strategy is in place. [103165]

Hilary Benn: The authorised operational capacity of Ashfield young offender institution is 400 (303 juveniles (15 to 17 years' of age) and 97 over 18-year-olds). It is currently operating within a reduced capacity of 212 places. On the night of 16–17 March 2003, there were 192 juveniles. There are no prisoners over 18-years-old at the institution. The Youth Justice Board (YJB) has not yet specifically transferred any prisoner out of Ashfield and is seeking alternative accommodation within the Prison Service with the view to fully withdrawing from Ashfield during 2003–04.

An agreed timetabled action plan has been put in place in response to the recommendations of the recent report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on Ashfield. Some points from this action plan come into effect in April 2003 and monitoring of the plan will then start.

Offending behaviour programmes available to young people at Ashfield include: anger management; prevention of car crime; and Motivating Offenders to Rethink Everything (MORE). A new programme, Strength and Survival (SAS), is due to start in April. This programme focuses on confidence building and assertiveness for offenders.

Staffing levels at Ashfield are now up to complement and are adequate. Stringent monitoring arrangements are in place to ensure the contractor maintains these levels. Additional new staff are being recruited and trained, and experienced staff from other establishments are offering support. Reception staff are trained in suicide prevention measures and this is a core part of the initial training for all new custody officers.

Cells are allocated on the basis of risk assessments. Once allocated, the status of young people in both shared and single cells is reviewed regularly. There is an anti-bullying strategy in place at Ashfield. The strategy was audited by a team from the Area Office for juveniles in February 2003 and was judged to be compliant with national standards.

Purposeful activity levels are carefully monitored and will continue to be monitored. The delivery of purposeful activity has improved significantly in recent months, resulting in an average of 34 hours per week delivery since January 2003. The YJB specifies 30 hours per week. The appropriate contractual action will be taken should levels fall below 30 hours per week.

Ashfield has a written drug strategy in place which is monitored by the establishment's drug strategy group. Ashfield has also received a substantial amount of funding to enable them to increase their delivery of drug/substance misuse intervention programmes through an enhanced Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare (CARAT) service. All juvenile establishments have a written drug policy. The juvenile drug strategy is being reviewed by the Prison Service and the YJB and will result in the implementation of a new substance misuse strategy for young people. No cost has been incurred by the Prison Service in raising standards at Ashfield to meet the requirements of PS04950.

Ashfield has a resettlement strategy in place, and is carrying out a needs analysis of the resettlement needs of the young people in order to better support resettlement. However, securing appropriate accommodation on release is proving difficult. The Detention and Training Order is served both in custody and the community. Multi-agency Youth Offending Teams have been established and work with young people in custody and on release.

The YJB is supporting a number of resettlement pilot programmes in the juvenile estate in order to evaluate the most effective way of ensuring young people's resettlement needs are met.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 1076W, on asylum seekers, what methods of identification and judging the age of unaccompanied child asylum seekers without documentation are used, apart from appearance; and if he will make a statement. [103402]

Beverley Hughes: In the absence of documentary evidence establishing age the judgment as to whether an applicant is under or over 18 is based solely on appearance. If the applicant wishes to obtain a medical assessment of age she or he may do so independently and any such assessment will be taken into consideration. Any age assessment provided by Social Services, based on behavioural and cultural factors, is taken into account.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 1076W on asylum seekers, what system the Department has in place to locate relatives of unaccompanied child asylum seekers other than use of the Red Cross and other charities. [103403]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate refers all unaccompanied asylum seeking children to Local Authority Social Services Departments, and they then make use of the Red Cross and other organisations to trace parents. The process of accessing these tracing services rests with the Local Authority.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Government has in place (a) to stop child trafficking for the sex trade and (b) to protect child asylum seekers from organised criminal groups when they arrive in the UK. [103404]

Beverley Hughes: The United Kingdom is committed to tackling the trafficking of children for sexual exploitation. Our strategy on trafficking is set out in the White Paper "Secure Border Safe Haven" and focuses on strengthening the law through new offences covering trafficking; providing appropriate support to victims of trafficking in the UK; tackling the criminals through intelligence and enforcement operations through the Reflex taskforce; European Union co-operation and prevention in source and transit countries in partnership with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development.

The new Sexual Offences Bill sets out new wide-ranging offences covering trafficking for sexual exploitation to replace the stop-gap offence of trafficking for the purpose of prostitution, introduced in the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. The offence of trafficking for sexual exploitation carries a tough maximum penalty of 14 years. In addition to this, the Bill also introduces a new offence of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of a child, which will protect children up to 18. It covers a range of offences, including buying the sexual services of a child, (for which the penalty ranges from seven years to life depending on the age of the child); and causing, facilitating or controlling the commercial sexual exploitation of a child in prostitution or pornography, for which the maximum penalty will be 14 years' imprisonment.

Child victims of trafficking are referred to social services to receive advice and support based on their particular needs. Under the Children Act 1989, local authorities have a duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children who are in need by providing a range and level of services appropriate to those children's needs or, where appropriate, by arranging for the provision of services from other agencies. We are working with Department of Health on examples of good practice on how this commitment is delivered.

Joint work is also underway between key agencies at principal entry points to identify children at risk. A Child Protection Pilot Project was launched on 10 March at Heathrow, this is a joint operation between the Metropolitan Police and the Immigration Service.

[103484]

Beverley Hughes: I have instituted measures to deal with outstanding correspondence and reach a steady state of replying to letters within target. In keeping with letters from other right hon. and hon. Members I will reply to my hon. Friend's letters as soon as possible.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Members for West Worcestershire dated 20 September 2002 for which an acknowledgement card (ref. 19910/2) was sent on 25 November 2002. [103542]

Beverley Hughes: My noble Friend Lord Filkin replied to the hon. Member on 17 March.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of service provided by the Criminal Records Bureau; and how many applications are waiting to be processed and what the average time taken is, broken down by employment sectors. [103310]

Hilary Benn: Since 11 March 2002 the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) has received 1,537,968 Disclosure applications and has issued 1,341,679 Disclosures. There are less than 44,000 applications currently outside our three week service standard. This figure has reduced from its peak of 109,000 during the summer of 2002 as a direct consequence of the targeted work that is being done to clear the oldest applications from the system. The current average time taken to process a Disclosure application stands at five weeks.

For the last four months the CRB has issued on average more Disclosures each week than it has received applications for, thereby reducing the number of outstanding cases. The CRB is issuing around 42,000 Disclosures per week, which is over double the weekly output issued by the police under the previous arrangements. There are no IT Procedures at present to extract information from the CRB database by employment sector. It is expected that this functionality will become available in subsequent system releases. No distinction is made in relation to the profession of an applicant as all applications are subject to the same level of service.

London Bombings

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bomb at the King's Arms public house in Woolwich, London on 7 November 1974; [103442]

(2) what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bomb at the Tower of London on 17 July 1974; [103441]

(3) what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bomb at Green Park Underground Station in London on 9 October 1975; [103444]

(4) what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bomb at the Hilton Hotel in London on 3 September 1975; [103440]

(5) what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bomb at Walton's Restaurant, Walton Street, London on 18 November 1975; [103445]

(6) what progress has been made in securing convictions against those responsible for the bomb attack on a coach travelling along the M62 on 4 February 1974. [103443]

Mr. Blunkett: These cases remain open. Should any new evidence or intelligence come to the attention of the police service, in these or other similar cases, it will, of course, be investigated fully.

Ministerial Secretariat and Communication Directorate

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total (a) cost and (b) staffing of the (i) Ministerial Secretariat and (ii) Communication Directorate was in each year since 1990–91; what the purpose of each is; and if he will make a statement. [99808]

Mr. Blunkett: The purpose of the Ministerial Secretariat is both to support Ministers and the permanent secretary in their parliamentary and departmental work and the Department in working effectively with Ministers and private office to achieve the Home Office aims. Figures for the Secretariat are:

Year	Staff numbers	Costs
1996–97	72	3,279,782
1997–98	62	3,340,790
1998–99	79	3,833,174
1999–2000	79	3,754,063
2000–01	79	[1]4,116,973
2001–02	91	4,877,233
2002–03	101	[2]5,089,014

[1] Costs have increased following the addition of two new Ministers and their private offices together with other re-organisation of staff between private office and the rest of the Department.

[2] Estimated figures for year end.

The purpose of the Communication Directorate is to take a strategic overview of Home Office communication activity. This involves setting and facilitating delivery of strategic objectives through effective long-term planning, co-ordination and evaluation. Figures for the Communication Directorate are:

Year	Staff numbers	Communication Directorate costs	Publicity costs
1996–97	100	3,713,192	8,386,880

[1] Estimated figures for year end.

The publicity costs comprise major campaigns on police recruitment, crime reduction and until June 2001 electoral registration and fire safety.

These staffing figures include press office where numbers have risen following an externally led review of the structure and operation of the press office in 1999. One of the benefits has been that media calls to the press office are being answered within four rings 90 per cent. of the time. Previously there were occasions when up to 40 per cent. of media calls were lost.

Details of costs prior to 1996 are not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost of (a) ministerial cars and drivers and (b) taxis for his Department was in 2002. [101535]

Mr. Blunkett: Responsibility for the provision of ministerial cars and drivers has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car and Despatch Agency. Part (a) of this question will be addressed in a letter from Mr. Nick Matheson, Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency to the hon. Member.

The cost of taxi fares incurred by the Home Office is not recorded centrally and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Miscarriage of Justice

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he takes into account when assessing ex gratia payments for persons whose convictions have been quashed as a result of a miscarriage of justice; and if he will make a statement. [103961]

Hilary Benn: While the Home Secretary decides whether an applicant qualifies for compensation, the assessment of the amount of compensation is undertaken by an Assessor appointed by the Home Secretary under the Criminal Justice Act 1988, currently the Lord Brennan QC. In statutory cases the amount of an award is wholly a matter for the Assessor and the Home Secretary has no power to influence or vary his determination. In ex gratia cases the Assessor's role is to advise the Home Secretary but successive Home Secretaries have agreed to be bound by the Assessor's advice.

In calculating the amount of compensation to be awarded to victims of miscarriages of justice, the Assessor applies principles analogous to those governing the assessment of damages for civil wrongs. The level of compensation is calculated in the same way whether the applicant qualified for compensation under the statutory scheme or the ex gratia scheme. The basis on which compensation is assessed is given in statute (section 133(4A) of the Criminal Justice Act 1988), in the Home Office "Compensation for Miscarriages of Justice—Note for Successful Applicants" (copies of which have already been placed in the Library) and in individual assessments.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many named day written questions were tabled to the Department between 15 October 2002 and 24 February 2003; how many that received a holding answer were given a substantive answer (a) within three days, (b) within seven days, (c) within 14 days, (d) within 28 days and (e) over 28 days later; and what procedures the Department has in place to monitor performance on answering (i) parliamentary questions and (ii) ministerial letters. [99431]

Mr. Blunkett: 541 named day written questions were tabled to the Home Office between 15 October 2002 and 24 February 2003. 426 received a holding answer. Of these:

163 were answered within three days;

104 were answered within seven days;

96 were answered within 14 days;

40 were answered within 28 days; and

23 took over 28 days to be answered.

The Home Office recognises that its performance in answering PQs is not as good as it should be and is working closely with directorates and its business change and IT partners to improve the situation. We hope to implement a new electronic PQ system by the summer. This should provide us with enhanced methods for monitoring performance and help us to become more efficient in answering the ever-increasing volume of PQs that we receive.

The target for responding to letters from MPs is 15 working days. To monitor performance, management information is produced internally on a weekly and monthly basis to show details of unanswered letters, and plot overall performance against the target. This month, the Home Office is beginning the roll out of a new computer based correspondence tracking system which, as well as enabling the efficient handling of correspondence, will also provide more detailed management information to help monitor performance.

Sex Trade Workers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions the Government have had with the Government and agencies of the Republic of Ireland about preventing the movement of sex trade workers over the UK border with the Republic. [102433]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 12 March 2003]: I am not aware that any discussions have taken place specifically focusing on preventing the movement of sex trade workers between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

The issue of the trafficking of those working in the sex trade is one which the Government take very seriously indeed. We have introduced a number of measures to address this.

The Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, introduced a new offence that commenced on 10 February 2003 which criminalised the trafficking of a person for the purpose of controlling them in prostitution.

The Sexual Offences Bill, introduced into the House of Lords on 28 January 2003 proposes new comprehensive offences of trafficking for sexual exploitation to replace the stop-gap offence introduced by the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 of trafficking in prostitution. These new offences tackle the movement of people into, within and out of the UK for the purposes of sexual exploitation, and will carry maximum penalties of 14 years imprisonment. The offence relating to trafficking within the UK applies equally to UK nationals trafficked from place to place in the UK, and to foreign nationals brought here and then moved around from place to place within the UK. This is the first time that the trafficking of UK nationals within the UK has been tackled in legislation.

Visas

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas permitting entry without restrictions on work have been issued in each of the last seven years. [102821]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 13 March 2003]: There are a range of ways of entering the United Kingdom, legally, from outside the European Union for employment purposes. The main route of entry into the UK for economic purposes is the work permit scheme, which has recently been modernised, and which requires employees to submit applications on behalf of employees. There are a number of other labour-related entry routes such as the Highly Skilled Migrant Programme and Innovator categories. Other routes such as visitors, students, working holidaymakers and those that exist for family reunion and humanitarian protection, all place restrictions on the applicants ability to work in the UK.

Women Prisoners

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women received prison sentences in each of the last five years for (a) failing to have a television licence and (b) other debt. [103092]

Hilary Benn: The information is given in the table.

Number of females received into prison

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
For defaulting on the payment of a fine for using a television without a licence	61	41	24	12	9
For defaulting on the payment of a fine for other offences	311	285	191	137	64
For non-payment of community charge/council tax	30	11	7	5	5

Yarl's Wood

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the date for the reopening of the undamaged section of the Yarl's Wood Removal Centre for women detainees and their families has been changed; and if he will make a statement. [103954]

Beverley Hughes: We want Yarl's Wood to re-open as soon as possible. However, we are continuing to negotiate with Group 4 Amey International and the insurers about the future of the remaining centre at Yarl's Wood and the claim for losses following the fire. Until these negotiations are concluded, no firm date can be given in respect of when Yarl's Wood will re-open.

HEALTH

Acute Care

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the areas where waiting lists for treatment in acute hospitals have lengthened since 2000–01. [88756]

Mr. Hutton: From 1 April 2002, the maximum waiting time for inpatient treatment has been cut from 18 months to 15 months. The National Health Service are working to reduce waiting times further, so that by the end of March 2003, the maximum waiting time foran inpatient appointment will be cut to 12 months.

Maximum waiting times will continue to fall year on year, so that, by the end of 2005, the maximum waiting time for inpatient treatment will be cut to six months.Information on the number of acute NHS trusts by Department of Health and Social Care in England, which have increased their inpatient waiting list size from end of December 2000 to end of December 2002 has been placed in the Library. The information also shows the number of patients waiting over 12 months for an inpatient admission for these trusts at the end of December 2000 and December 2002, the increase/decrease of over 1 2-month waiters from the end of December to December 2002 has also been provided. Whilst recognising that list size in these trusts has increased the government is committed to ensuring the maximum waiting times are reduced in these and all other NHS trusts.

Civil Defence

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what training and equipment for response to a chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear attack is provided for paramedics and other first-response medical personnel; and if he will make a statement; [103435]

(2) what funding, training and expertise have been made available to ensure acute primary care units are fully prepared to handle (a) casualties of a chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear incident and (b) mass casualties; and if he will make a statement. [103434]

Mr. Hutton: Since 11 September 2001, national health service preparations have been stepped up to ensure we are as prepared as we can be in responding to a range of possible new threats, such as the deliberate release of chemical or biological agents or incidents associated with radiological or nuclear hazards.

The NHS has increased its preparedness by stockpiling medical equipment, antidotes, antibiotics and vaccines. The Department of Health has issued specific guidance to the NHS on the public health response to the deliberate release of chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear (CBRN) incidents, mass decontamination and mass casualties. New protective suits and associated mobile decontamination units have been for use by ambulance and accident and emergency staff working on the decontamination of patients alongside appropriate training for their use.

The Department of Health has made available through the emergency planning section of its website www.doh.gov.uk/epcu a comprehensive package of guidance for clinicians on dealing with the consequences of deliberate release. This information is regularly updated. The website contains a link to the Public Health Laboratory Service website www.phls.org.uk which provides additional clinical and other information.

General Practitioners

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) GPs and (b) GP practices there are in Greater London; and how many there were in May 1997. [101249]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 6 March 2003]: Greater London is not recognised as an area for which figures are collected. The area covering the Directorate of Health and Social Care—London is given as the nearest alternative and figures are shown in the following table.

Department of Health General and Personal Medical Services Statistics.

We recognise that London has both short and longer term special needs with regard to the recruitment and retention of its general practice (GP) workforce. The NHS Plan target is 255 additional GPs in London by 2004. We are committed to expanding the primary care workforce both through national and local initiatives.

Provisional figures for September 2002 from the Modernisation Board Annual Report show that in England since 1999 there has been an increase 700 GPs.

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department will review guidelines surrounding the charging for certificates signed by general practitioners; and if he will make a statement. [101912]

Mr. Hutton: General practitioners are required to issue specified medical certificates, free of charge. However, GPs also provide a variety of other services, which successive governments have regarded as private matters between an organisation and the doctor providing the service and the doctor is free to make a charge for these non National Health Service services if he or she wishes.

Health Visitors

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to allow direct entry into health visiting rather than through nursing or midwifery. [103515]

Mr. Hutton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council has only the powers to regulate the professions of nursing and midwifery.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with representatives of health visitors. [103551]

Mr. Hutton: Department of Health Ministers and officials hold regular discussions with health visitor representatives. In recent months these have included discussions on health visitor regulation, child protection and the Laming report, the children and maternity services national service framework, the framework for nursing in primary care, recruitment and retention issues and "Agenda for Change".

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to set up different registers for nurses, midwives and health visitors. [103514]

Mr. Hutton: None. The Nursing and Midwifery Council is the body responsible for making proposals in respect of the parts of the register.

Home Care Charges

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which local authorities in England received no income from home care charges in the latest available year for which figures are available. [100129]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 28 February 2003]: In 2001–02, Cumbria, Isles of Scilly, Southwark, Stockton-on-Tees, Swindon and Wokingham councils did not report any income arising from sales, fees and charges from their home care services.

In 2000–01, Cumbria, Slough, Stockton-on-Tees and Tower Hamlets did not report any income arising from home care.

In 1999–2000, Coventry, Cumbria, Hammersmith and Fulham, Stockton-on-Tees and Tower Hamlets did not report any income arising from home care.

Needlestick Injuries

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many needlestick injuries there were in the NHS involving the risk of transmission of a blood borne virus in (a) England, (b) each NHS region and (c) each strategic health authority in each of the last six years. [102852]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect these data centrally but relies on data that are already reportable under current legislation and departmental guidance. Data collected on a voluntary basis from national health service trusts between July 1997 and June 2002 identified 1,550 incidents that involved the risk of transmission of blood borne viruses.

Ministers have agreed that new guidance to be published in autumn 2003 will advise NHS employers that they should collect comprehensive and validated data on the incidence of needlestick injuries, via a standardised surveillance programme.

NHS (International Recruitment)

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) financial and (b) other support is available to overseas nurses in finding suitable accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [103074]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 March 2003]: The guidance on international nursing recruitment sets out national health service trust responsibilities when recruiting nurses internationally. Employers should pay for recruits' air fares and either provide trust accommodation or take steps to seek appropriate accommodation.

The NHS housing initiative, organised through NHS Estates, will provide assistance with key worker accommodation.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total income was from private charges in each NHS acute trust in the last year for which figures are available. [103998]

Mr. Hutton: The information has been placed in the Library.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) chief executives and (b) other non-medical staff of NHS trusts are paid in excess of £100,000. [101077]

Mr. Hutton: The audited summarisation schedules of National Health Service trusts in 2001–02 showed 13 non-medical staff with remuneration over 100,000. This figure excludes directors and chief executives for whom information is not available nationally. Some information on chief executives' and directors' salaries is included in the accounts for individual trusts which are published locally.

Nurses

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of agency and bank nurses in (a) Sutton and (b) London in the last 12 months; and what assessment he has made of the impact of these costs on the respective primary care trusts. [102249]

Mr. Hutton: Expenditure on bank nurses is included within national health service nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff. Expenditure on agency nurses is included within non-NHS nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff.

The following table contains data outlining the expenditure on non-NHS nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff within the boundary of the London Department of Health and Social Care.

In December an agreement was awarded to 72 agencies for the supply of agency nurses, midwives, health visitors and health care assistants to the acute and primary care sectors of the NHS across London.

This agreement will introduce new quality standards both in terms of the agency workers and also the services to be offered by the agencies. Furthermore it is anticipated that the cost of these agency workers will be reduced by between £9 million and £18 million across London during 2003–04.

Oldchurch Hospital

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on meeting targets for Oldchurch Hospital in the London borough of Havering. [101982]

Mr. Hutton: Oldchurch Hospital is part of Barking, Havering and Redbridge National Health Service Trust. It is not possible to differentiate between the two sites as data are aggregated.

The trust met both the 15-month inpatient and 26-week outpatient waiting times targets last year and is working towards achieving a maximum wait of 12 months for inpatients and 21 weeks for outpatients by the end of March 2003.

The trust has also made significant progress on reducing the numbers of beds used by delayed transfers of care over the year.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the management of Oldchurch Hospital in the London borough of Havering; and what plans he has to visit the hospital. [101983]

Mr. Hutton: I have had no recent discussions with the management of Oldchurch Hospital. However, the North East London Strategic Health Authority directors, who, since Shifting the Balance of Power, now performance manage Barking, Havering and Redbridge National Health Service Trust, regularly meet with trust management.

I last visited Barking, Havering and Redbridge NHS Trust on 6 September 2001. I have no current plans to visit the hospital.

Passive Smoking

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effects of passive smoking in the workplace. [98501]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

Research by the Department of Health's Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health (SCOTH) into the general effects of exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is continuing.

The results of a survey on smoking behaviour and attitudes, undertaken by the Office for National Statistics in 2002, are due to be published on behalf of the Department of Health this summer.

Smallpox

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the World Health Organisation's advice on smallpox strategy referred to by the Minister for Policing, Crime Reduction and Community Safety, Official Report, column 204WH, in his reply to the debate on civil defence on 4 March 2003. [102501]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 12 March 2003]: A copy of the advice issued by the World Health Organisation in October 2001 has been placed in the Library. This advice followed a review of the WHO guidelines of 1998, and a copy of these guidelines will be placed in the Library.

Teenage Pregnancies

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pregnancies in girls under the age of 16 there have been in each year since 1995 in (a) Doncaster and (b) the UK. [103509]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Caroline Flint, dated 20 March 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking how many pregnancies in girls under 16 there have been in each year since 1995 in (a) Doncaster and (b) the UK. (103509)

The figures requested are given in the table below for 1995 to 2001, the latest year for which figures are available, for Doncaster and Great Britain. Figures for the United Kingdom are not available, as the 1967 Abortion Act does not apply in Northern Ireland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards

Tony Wright: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the cost of the office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards was, including staff, in each Session since 1996–97. [103502]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The costs of the office of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards, by financial year, are shown in the following table (the figures by Session are not available), and are mainly direct staffing costs. Most of the general office running costs, including accommodation and IT/IS support, are absorbed by other parts of the House administration and cannot easily be disaggregated.

TRANSPORT

London Underground

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his Written Ministerial Statement, on 4 February 2003, Official Report, column 10WS, on London Underground, what amendments he proposes to ensure that the operation of London Underground's contracts is not affected when they are transferred from one body to another; whether the PPP Consortia and lenders have a veto over the transfer of London Underground and Transport for London; and if he will make a statement. [103305]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government's proposals for amendments to the Greater London Authority Act 1999 are contained in clause 108 of the Railways and Transport Safety Bill as amended in Standing Committee D, which is available on the House website.

The Secretary of State told the House in his written statement, on 4 February 2003,Official Report, column 10WS, that the transfer of London Underground Ltd. to Transport for London will only take place ahead of such amendments to the Greater London Authority Act 1999 with the agreement of the PPP consortia and lenders.

South Central Electrostar Train

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much compensation is payable to Bombardier as a result of the lack of power for the South Central Electrostar trains. [98397]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail authority is leading an industry wide project to upgrade the power supply in the southern region. Development of the project is advanced and discussions have begun on the project's financial implications for the SRA, Network Rail, train operators and other parties such as the rolling stock manufacturers. Details are still emerging, but any compensation to Bombardier is likely to be a matter between them and their client for the new trains, Go-Via.

TREASURY

Children at Risk

Alistair Burt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans the team looking at the Green Paper for Children at Risk have to recommend a review of educational and social institutions designed to provide a more nurturing environment for children whose lives are fragmented; [103844]

(2) what plans the team looking at the Green Paper for Children at Risk have for joint training for children's professionals in the core skills needed by those who work with children; [103845]

(3) what plans the team looking at the Green Paper for Children at Risk have to support parents in the transition to parenthood. [103846]

Mr. Boateng: The Green Paper on Children at Risk, to be published this spring, is examining the range of services available to children and young people who are at risk of educational failure, offending, victimisation and abuse, and poor health.Whilst its too early to comment on the detail of the Green Paper on Children at Risk, the role of parents, schools and children's professionals in improving the outcomes for children are at the core of the work. The Green Paper is looking at how parents can be enabled to support their children best, from preparing for parenthood, throughout the key early years and as their children grow towards adulthood.

Positive experiences of schools and of after school leisure activities outside of schools, play a pivotal role in building self-esteem and enabling children to succeed, educationally, socially and in employment in later life. The Green Paper is considering how mainstream services and institutions can ensure they are positive and accessible environments for the most vulnerable children and young people.

The Green Paper is also looking at ways to improve common training across the professionals who work with children and young people to ensure a shared understanding of child development and safeguarding children.

Fraud

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the cost to British financial institutions in the last two years from (a) stolen corporate identities and (b) hoax e-mails. [102001]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: I have been asked to reply.

While there have been incidents of corporate identity fraud in the UK in the last two years which have been investigated by UK law enforcement agencies, these cases have not resulted in any reported loss to the financial institutions concerned. With regards to incidences of hoax e-mails, more commonly known as advance fee or '419' fraud, once again there has been no reported financial loss to UK financial institutions. Losses have been sustained by a number of individual victims of such crime and in the years 2001 and 2002 National Criminal Intelligence Service figures detail reported losses of £19,451,000. This however is likely to be only a small percentage of losses as few victims are prepared to acknowledge their losses to Law Enforcement.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax returns were reported lost or mislaid by the Inland Revenue in each of the last five years. [104103]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue do not keep records of the number of tax returns reported lost or mislaid.

Every year the Revenue receive and process around nine million self assessment tax returns. Over 99 per cent. of returns received by the due date (31 January) are processed by 31 March.

Personal Tax

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recalculation of personal tax liabilities. [103915]

Dawn Primarolo: An individual's personal tax liability will depend on a number of factors including the income tax rates and bands and the level of personal allowances. It will also make a difference if the individual has savings or investment income that is subject to income tax.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Contingency Planning

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on his Department's (a) responsibilities and (b) assets with regard to civil contingency planning; what funds are committed; what action he is taking within his Department to improve such planning; and what action he is taking in collaboration with other departments. [102625]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my hon. Friend the Home Secretary made on civil contingencies on 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 72WS, as part of the debates on the approval of the Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001 Order 2003 and the Intelligence and Security Committee report on the Bali bombing. The statement refers to the Lead Government Department Paper which Cabinet Office placed in the Library of the House on 23 July 2002 and which sets out the role of the lead Government Departments in planning for and managing crises.

The Civil Contingencies Secretariat, a part of the Cabinet Office, supports the Home Secretary in co-ordinating the work to enhance civil contingency planning.

Its current objectives are to:

1. lead horizon scanning activity to identify and assess potential and imminent disruptive challenges to the domestic UK and assist in the development of an integrated response. Build partnerships with other organisations to develop and share best practice in horizon scanning and develop the knowledge of the UK's critical networks and infrastructure.
2. ensure that the Government can continue to function and deliver public services during crises, working with Departments and other Secretariats in the Cabinet Office to ensure that plans and systems to cover the full range of potential disruption are in place and exercised. CCS would provide support to the Civil Contingencies Committee which would meet in the case of a specific emergency to co-ordinate the government's response.
3. lead the delivery of improved resilience to disruption across Government and the public sector, including supporting Ministers in developing policy, agreeing priorities and planning assumptions and ensuring that core response capabilities are developed accordingly. This includes the development and promulgation of doctrine.
4. improve the capability of all levels of Government, the wider public sector and the private and voluntary sectors to prepare for, respond to and manage potential challenges, through development of key skills and awareness.

To carry out this role, £39.5 million was allocated to the CCS in February 2003. This included the £10 million administration and capital costs of the Secretariat, the £19 million Local Authority Grant and £10 million to the Met Office. In addition the Office of the e-Envoy has a budget of just over £6. 9 million for the Emergency Communications Network.

External Reports

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list (a) the title and subject, (b) the total cost to his Department and (c) the commissioned author or organisation of each external report commissioned by the Cabinet Office in each year since 1997. [103710]

Mr. Alexander: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times he has visited Scotland on official duties each year since 2000; and what meetings were held on each occasion. [103622]

Mr. Alexander: Since joining the Cabinet Office in June 2002 I have not visited Scotland on Cabinet Office business, but my right hon. Friend the Lord Macdonald of Tradeston had one official Cabinet Office business trip in 2001 and one in 2002.

However in line with exemptions 2 and 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, it is not the normal practice of Governments to release details of specific meetings or their content, as some of these discussions may have taken place on a confidential basis.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans Ministers in the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make ministerial announcements in April; and whether officers in Government Departments are permitted to collate briefings for Ministers for election campaign debates. [103668]

Mr. Alexander: Departmental business during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament, will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in UK Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament, National Assembly for Wales and English local authorities, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

Copies were placed in the Libraries of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Award Schemes

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the award schemes in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 promoted by the Department; what their scope was; when the relevant participating organisations are scheduled to be sent results; and whether other parties will be given notification of the results at the same time. [102055]

Alun Michael: None.

Eggs (Marking)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which agency will have responsibility for enforcing the EU's proposed rules on the compulsory marking of hen eggs; what resources the Government plans to make available for the enforcement duties; and if she will make a statement. [103760]

Margaret Beckett: In England and Wales, responsibility for enforcing rules on the compulsory marking of hens eggs will fall principally to this Department's Egg Marketing Inspectorate although local authority trading standards officers will be responsible for enforcement at retail level.

This work will form part of the normal enforcement of egg marketing legislation, and as such, no additional resources have been allocated to it.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to her answer of 25 February 2003, Official Report, column 455W, on egg marking, what assessment she has made of the impact of the new rules for marking on the eggs sold at Women's Institute markets. [103741]

Margaret Beckett: The principal purpose of the new rules on egg marking is to improve consumer information and to provide greater traceability, for example in the event of a possible food borne disease outbreak. This need applies irrespective of the outlet. Where eggs are from a clearly identifiable producer and are sold direct to the final consumer in a WI market, they do not necessarily have to be marked. Otherwise, the normal egg marketing rules will apply.

National Parks

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what figures she collates on traffic flows in national parks. [103909]

Alun Michael: None, but the Department for Transport collects such information on motorways, 'A' roads and many 'B' roads.

DEFENCE

European Security and Defence Policy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with other EU member states on the involvement of (a) Canada, (b) Russia, (c) Ukraine and (d) other countries in the European Security and Defence Policy; and if he will make a statement. [103869]

Mr. Hoon: Initial principles for the participation of Canada, Russia, Ukraine and other interested states in the European Security and Defence Policy were agreed at the Nice European Council in December 2000, and arrangements subsequently set out in letters to the countries concerned. They have not been the subject of recent ministerial discussion. Canada may participate in EU operations which use NATO assets and capabilities, if she so chooses, and we expect her to take part in the forthcoming EU operation in the Republic of Macedonia on this basis. Canada may also take part in EU operations without recourse to NATO assets and capabilities, if invited by the Council. These arrangements mirror those for European non-EU NATO Allies. Russia, Ukraine and other interested countries may be invited to participate in EU-led operations on a case-by-case basis.

HMS Nottingham

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the predicted cost of the repairs being carried out on HMS Nottingham is; when it will be ready for service; and if he will make a statement. [104225]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 4 February 2003 Official Report, column 177W, to the hon. Member for Cornwall, South East (Mr. Breed).

Indonesia

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to release departmental papers from 1975–76 concerning Indonesia, East Timor and the Balebo killings. [103922]

Dr. Moonie: We are not aware of any Ministry of Defence files dealing specifically with this subject. However, two general files have been identified covering wider events from that time. These will be made available to researchers in the Public Record Office in accordance with the provisions of the Public Records Act, 1958 and 1967.

Iraq

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when requests were received from the United States for additional infantry for possible military action against Iraq; whether they have been agreed to; and if he will make a statement. [104000]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 20 March 2003]: I have not received any requests from the United States for additional infantry. However, I refer the hon. Member to my written ministerial statement on 13 March 2003, Official Report, column 20WS, in which I announced the deployment of the 1st Battalion The Duke of Wellington's Regiment and 202 Field Hospital (Volunteer). Respectively, these will provide additional infantry and medical capability to Headquarters 1 (UK) Armoured Division, so that it can respond to a range of potential tasks and circumstances.

Operational Performance Statements

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action the Government will take to ensure that those soldiers, sailors and airmen who have not been able to undertake the work and practice necessary to achieve Operational Performance Statement while covering for the fire strike and therefore will not reach their next promotion level and an increased pay band, do not lose out; and if he will make a statement. [102611]

Dr. Moonie: Every effort is being made to ensure that personnel who covered for the fire strike will not be disadvantaged.

For the Navy, deferral or cancellation of planned training due to Op. FRESCO is recognised as an exigency of service and such delays in individuals' promotion will be considered on a case by case basis. However, the position of individuals who have been withdrawn from career training courses whilst in attendance and have suffered a delay in their promotion as a result, has been recognised as unique. On return to normal duty and on completion of outstanding training, such individuals will be entitled to have their effective date of promotion backdated to the day that they would have been promoted but for Op. FRESCO.

For the Army, Op. FRESCO is also seen as an operational commitment under the terms of Military Aid to the Civil Administration (MACA). Soldiers deployed on operations will receive due credit for the operational experience gained and selection for both promotion and development training will be addressed on a case by case basis. Where individuals have been removed from career courses to participate in the operation, qualifications and benefits will be back-dated to the conclusion of the original course once the training has been completed.

In the RAF, personnel whose courses were delayed, or who were withdrawn from training on courses that affected pay and seniority, will receive pay and seniority backdated to the original date of graduation on subsequent successful completion of the course.

Transportable Surgical Facilities

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many modularised transportable surgical facilities have been procured for the Armed Forces. [103978]

Dr. Moonie: A total of four Modular Transportable Surgical Facility systems have been purchased.

HEALTH

Child Trafficking

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding is in place for specialist agencies to provide assistance and support to child victims of trafficking. [103405]

Jacqui Smith: We expect that the provision of assistance and support to child victims of trafficking will be secured by local statutory services in response to identified needs, whether provided directly or through specialist agencies. The relevant statutory agencies include the immigration service, the police, social services and health, which have a responsibility to safeguard vulnerable children and to prevent and detect crimes against them.

Child victims of trafficking are likely to be in need of welfare services and in many cases, protection under the Children Act 1989. Social services have a duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of these children following an assessment of their circumstances.

Care Homes

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much funding has been made available in 2002–03 for care homes in (a) the London Borough of Havering, (b) each of the other London boroughs and (c) each administrative area for health care in the United Kingdom; [101976]

(2) if he will make a statement on care home funding in the London Borough of Havering. [101978]

Jacqui Smith: In 2002–03, the Revenue Support Grant for the London Borough of Havering made provision for an increase in funding for social services of 5.2 per cent., compared with a national average increase of 4.9 per cent. This represented an increase from £38,514,000 in 2001–02 to £39,890,000 in 2002–03. Councils have discretion to decide their spending priorities and are not required to spend exactly these amounts on social care. It is therefore for each council to decide how much to spend on care homes. In addition, in 2002–03 Havering received a Building Capacity Grant of £1,173,000 which is more than double the amount they received in the previous year.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 11 March 2003, Official Report, column 232W, on care homes, how many letters he has sent to care homes regarding the failure to pass on the free nursing care contribution. [103513]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave the hon. Member on 26 [illegible] 2002, Official Report, columns 935–36W, in which I made it clear that four providers had been written to about this. Health authorities and primary care trusts will also have written to providers on this subject

Hearing Aids

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) hearing aid users and (b) digital hearing aid users there were in (i) the Jarrow constituency, (ii) South Tyneside, (iii) Tyne and Wear and (iv) the UK on 1 February. [99929]

Jacqui Smith: The Royal National Institute for the Deaf estimates that there are 1.8 million people currently using hearing aids in England. Information is not collected centrally on numbers of people using analogue or digital hearing aids in England or in the localised areas specified. Information related to Wales and Scotland is a matter for the devolved administrations. Whilst the institutions in Northern Ireland are dissolved, responsibility rests with Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office.

Lymphoedema

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to promote therapies for people with lymphoedema. [104154]

Jacqui Smith: There is currently no cure but, with appropriate treatment, lymphoedema can be very well managed in the national health service. These treatments consist of a combination of skin care, exercise, massage and compression garments or bandaging. In a few cases it is possible to help surgically, for example by transplanting lymph vessels.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence has recently updated the Improving Outcomes in Breast Cancer Guidance, and that guidance made some recommendations about lymphoedema. The guidance recommends that cancer networks should agree guidelines for identification and management of lymphoedema and that a lymphoedema service, staffed by nurses and physiotherapists who have experience in dealing with this problem, should be available for all patients who experience arm swelling or discomfort.

Mencap

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet MENCAP to discuss progress in implementation of the White Paper, "Valuing People", through Local Learning Disability Partnership Boards. [103474]

Jacqui Smith: I have met representatives of MENCAP on several occasions since the publication of the White Paper "Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century" (Cm 5086) in March 2001 and have discussed a range of issues. I welcome MENCAP's very positive contribution to the implementation of the White Paper, for example through the current chief executive's membership of the Learning Disability Task Force and their management of the learning disability telephone Helpline. I look forward to meeting MENCAP's new chief executive when she has taken up her post and to working with her as we continue to implement "Valuing People". I should be happy to include the role of Learning Disability Partnership Boards in our discussions.

Mental Health (Salisbury)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when mental health service improvements announced in the national service framework for mental health and the NHS plan in respect of (a) crisis teams, (b) assertive outreach programmes, (c) home treatment, (d) early intervention in psychosis and (e) primary care mental health teams will be launched in Salisbury. [103080]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 18 March 2003]: A mental health national service framework (NSF) was published in September 1999 which spells out national standards for mental health, what they aim to achieve, how they should be developed and delivered and how to measure performance in every part of the country. It concentrates on the mental health needs of working age adults, and covers health promotion, assessment and diagnosis, treatment, rehabilitation and care, encompassing primary and secondary care and the roles of partner agencies.

Work to develop mental health services is ongoing. In order to improve local services the local primary care trust has committed, in its three year local delivery plan, to increased investment in mental health, including investment in services for older people and dementia provision.

The Avon and Wiltshire Mental Health Partnership National Health Service Trust has advised of specific mental health services in place as follows:

Crisis teams and home treatment:

The intensive home support service already provides out-of-hours crisis support in Salisbury and south Wiltshire. Supports run from 9.00 am to 9.00 pm on weekdays and bank holidays and from 10am to 6pm on weekends.

Assertive Outreach programmes:

There is a small team currently seeing 14 clients in south Wiltshire, with the aim of increasing this to serve around 40 clients over the next few years. The programme will be considered under a major data led review of adult mental health services to be undertaken during 2003.

Across the whole Avon, Gloucestershire, and Wiltshire Strategic Health Authority area there have been substantial service improvements in line with NSF Guidance including:

six more crisis resolution teams eight more assertive outreach teams at least 12 more community gateway staff at least 14 more staff to give breaks to carers and strengthen carer support fully comprehensive community mental health teams in the three Wiltshire LIT areas better services for mentally-disordered offenders including expansion of two court assessment schemes and in-reach provision for prisoners better services for mentally-disordered offenders including expansion of two court assessment schemes and in-reach provision for prisoners better medium secure services including advocacy and social care services in keeping with the Lewis Report

increased security High Secure Hospitals

There have also been substantial improvements in the integrated care programme approach, mental health commissioning, and information sharing.

North Cumbria Acute Trust

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial package the former chief executive of North Cumbria Acute Trust received following his resignation. [103054]

Jacqui Smith: The former chief executive of the North Cumbria Acute National Health Service Trust has received no financial package following his resignation.

Prison Health Care

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget is for prison health care services; and what the total funding allocation to primary care trusts is for 2003–04 for the cost of taking over prison health care services. [103385]

Jacqui Smith: There has not, historically, been a separate budget for health care within overall prison service expenditure. A recent survey of prison establishments established that the full-year revenue cost of health care in English prisons in 2002–03 was around £113 million, excluding privately run prisons.

The Department will assume overall financial responsibility for prison health services from April 2003. However, the Government do not plan to devolve full financial responsibility for these services to primary care trusts (PCTs) until April 2006. Until then, the majority of funding for prison health services will be passed back to the prison service to secure services as now. Allocations to PCTs for 2003–04 take account of existing national health service responsibilities for securing secondary care services for prisoners, along with the development of mental health in-reach teams under the NHS Plan.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budget provision has been made for the screening of prison inmates for Hepatitis C. [103387]

Jacqui Smith: Prisoners in England and Wales are not routinely screened for Hepatitis C, although individuals may ask to be tested for evidence of the infection. Allocations made to primary care trusts include provision for the costs of such services.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which prisons condoms are available to prisoners (a) through the prison doctor, (b) through the prison shop and (c) from other sources; and if he will make a statement. [102470]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not available centrally. Prison doctors have been advised that they can make condoms available to individual prisoners on application where, in their clinical judgment, there is a risk of infection from HIV.

Reflex Sympathetic Dystrophy

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people suffering from reflex sympathetic dystrophy in the United Kingdom. [103569]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not collect statistics on the incidence of individual conditions so we are unable to offer an estimate of the number of people suffering from reflex sympathetic dystrophy in the United Kingdom.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security Service

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the operational responsibilities are of the Security Service in Northern Ireland; to whom the Security Service is accountable for its operations and activities in Northern Ireland; and what role Her Majesty's Government has in directing the operational activities of the Security Service in Northern Ireland. [103414]

Mr. Blunkett: The functions of the Security Service are set out in the Security Service Act 1989 as amended by the Security Service Act 1996.

Under the 1989 Act, the Director General of the Security Service controls its operations. While the Security Service acts ordinarily under the authority of the Home Secretary, it will report to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for its operations there.

The hon. Member will be aware that it is the longstanding policy of successive Governments not to comment in any way on the operational activities of the Security Service. Such information is outside of the scope of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many traffic wardens were employed in each year since 1997. [102254]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The total number of traffic wardens employed by police authorities in England and Wales for the last three years are given in the following table:

	Traffic warden strength
1999–2000	2,801
2000–01	2,538
2001–02	2,280

Figures for the years prior to 1999–2000 are not recorded centrally.

The number of traffic wardens has been falling over recent years because increasingly the offences with which they formerly dealt have been decriminalised and dealt with by local authority employees.

Asylum Application Processing Centres

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government progress in persuading non-EU countries to host British asylum application processing centres. [104239]

Beverley Hughes: We are still developing our ideas on how we want to advance new international approaches to asylum processing and protection. While there has been media speculation of possible locations for transit processing centres we have not started discussions with any country on the potential as host for such centres.

Chemical Agent Monitors

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hand-held chemical agent monitors are available in each police force. [102517]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The ability of police forces to respond to a terrorist incident involving the use of chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear (CBRN) materials is being strengthened through the increased provision of specialist police training and equipment. Home Office funding is being made available to meet the full running and equipment costs involved. It would not be appropriate, on security grounds, to give more specific information regarding the CBRN detection capability in each police force.

Civil Defence

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made to update the national civil defence and anti-terrorist emergency plans. [100077]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Ministerial Statements I made on 3 March 2003, Official Report, column 72WS, and 20 March 2003, Official Report, column 51WS.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 28 January from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Nariman Rauf Salih. [103745]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 20 March 2003.

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 4 February regarding a constituent, ref 3664/3. [104350]

Beverley Hughes: My noble Friend Lord Filkin wrote to my hon. Friend on 19 March 2003.

Distraction Burglaries

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what budget he has allocated to efforts to tackle distraction burglary in the financial years (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04. [102733]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: In 2002–03, we will have spent nearly £328,000 centrally on work to combat distraction burglary, including funding for a project targeting distraction burglary in Leeds, and the work of Distraction Burglary Task Force.

Crime Reduction funding for 2003–04 has mainly been distributed directly to Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships to use to tackle local priorities. There is no central Home Office budget dedicated to distraction burglary.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress against the National Distraction Burglary Task Force's action plan. [102734]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The National Distraction Burglary Task Force drew up a two year action plan in 2000. It set out a wide range of activities which reflect the Task Force's aim, which is

> "To tackle distraction burglary and thereby improve the quality of life of vulnerable communities through a co-ordinated national partnership initiative within England and Wales".

That action plan was substantially completed in 2002.

The Task Force held 11 regional conferences which were well attended and positively received. The report on the conferences has been published and sent to those who attended, others who work with the elderly and Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships.

The Task Force has also produced a range of materials to raise awareness of the issue of distraction burglary among a range of organisations, and to disseminate good practice. Nearly 7,000 toolkits, comprising a copy of a Good Practice Guide, two videos and samples of useful items for making homes more secure were produced for use by those working with the elderly and vulnerable. A leaflet highlighting the message "Stop ... Chain ... Check" has been produced and a series of newsletters for practitioners has been published.

Funding has been provided for two substantial research projects on distraction burglary. These are investigating key factors that affect vulnerability and the ability to resist attempted offences, We hope to publish the report of this research in May 2003.

From April 2003, offences deemed to be distraction burglary will be included in the recorded crime series; incorporated as a sub-heading within the Burglary Dwelling category.

Although the original action plan has been substantially completed, work to reduce distraction burglary is continuing and the Task Force has set up three sub-groups, to consider Communications, Prevention and Partnership. They will look at ways to develop key actions, such as offering advice and training, liaising with utility companies, police forces and others in order to improve the prevention and detection of this crime, and ways of further developing the existing guidance and materials.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to create a new, separate classification of distraction burglary for the purposes of recording crime statistics. [102735]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: With effect from 1 April 2003, we will be collecting centrally from police forces numbers of offences of distraction burglary. These will be recorded as a sub-group of the domestic burglary category and published in the recorded crime statistics.

The definition of distraction burglary we have agreed is:

> "Any crime where a falsehood, trick or distraction is used on an occupant of a dwelling to gain, or try to gain, access to the premises to commit burglary."

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported incidents of distraction burglary there were in each of the last five years; and what estimate he has made of the number of incidents of distraction burglary that go unreported each year. [103736]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: In 2002–03, we will have spent nearly £328,000 centrally on work to combat distraction burglary, including funding for a project targeting distraction burglary in Leeds, and the work of Distraction Burglary Task Force.

Crime reduction funding for 2003–04 [illegible] mainly been distributed directly to Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships to use to tackle local priorities. There is no central Home Office budget dedicated to distraction burglary.

Immigration Appeals

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals made from outside the UK were successful in each of the last three years for (a) asylum, (b) tourist visas, (c) work permits and (d) British citizenship. [102445]

Beverley Hughes: Under provisions of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 which came into force on 7 November 2002, a claimant whose asylum or human rights claim has been refused and certified as "clearly unfounded" may not appeal that refusal until they are outside the United Kingdom. No such appeals had been lodged as at end December 2002 (the latest date for which data are available). However, for the small number of such cases for which appeals have since been received and determined, none has been successful.

Prior to 7 November, no asylum applicants were required to appeal from outside the United Kingdom.

There is no statutory right of appeal against a refusal to grant tourist visas or British nationality.

The number of successful non-statutory appeals made outside the United Kingdom for work permits in each of the last three years is as follows: 753 in 2000; 937 in 2001; and 2,123 in 2002. The issue of a work permit does not guarantee the issue of a visa and/or entry to the United Kingdom.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list internal flights made by Ministers in his Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (iii) economy class. [103584]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided by my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

I also refer to the answer provided to the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 11 March 2003, Official Report, column 207W.

Detailed information for all Ministers in respect of United Kingdom travel is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are in the Library.

On-the-spot Fines

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the on-the-spot fines pilot project in North Wales. [103398]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: North Wales is one of five police forces piloting penalty notices for disorder in four police force areas. The pilot in North Wales commenced on 2 September in its central division. Up to 5 January 100 penalty notices had been issued with 53 paid and only one request for a court hearing. 23 penalty notices were within the 21 day payment period with no recorded outcome. North Wales police have welcomed this new option for dealing with low-level disorderly offending and are now extending the pilot forcewide.

Police

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his Answer of 24 February, ref 97598, what the role of his Department is in determining policy and guidelines relating to the deployment of police forces. [100063]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Under the Police Act 1996, a police force is under the control and direction of its chief officer. Operational decisions, including the deployment of officers, are a matter for the chief officer of police.

The Police Reform Act 2002 provides for the publication of an annual National Policing Plan which sets out the Home Secretary's strategic priorities for the police service and the targets and indicators by which police performance will be measured. Chief officers and police authorities are then required to have regard to the National Policing Plan when preparing their own three-year strategic plan.

From time to time the Home Secretary may also issue regulations requiring all forces to adopt particular procedures and practices in the interests of promoting efficiency and effectiveness. The Home Secretary may for the same reasons issue codes of practice on any function of chief officers and to which a chief officer shall have regard. The Home Secretary may issue guidance to the police on specific aspects of policing. Codes of practice are drafted by Centrex (the Central Police Training and Development Authority) after consultation with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities. The Home Secretary shall also seek the advice of Centrex (who will again consult) in drafting regulations.

The Home Secretary may also direct that an action plan be drawn up where inadequate performance is identified by Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary in a force or part of a force.

The National Centre for Policing Excellence (NCPE) has been established within Centrex specifically to advance the professional capacity of the police. It will develop and disseminate knowledge to improve effective policing practice and will focus on priority issues affecting public confidence and risk, including those required by the Home Secretary for incorporation into regulations and codes of practice.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department has withdrawn from the National Assembly for Wales police provision to fund centrally managed initiatives. [102762]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: A number of specific grants and central initiatives are financed from the overall provisions for police grant and for revenue support grant from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and from the Welsh Assembly Government. The share contributed by the National Assembly for 2003–04 is £21.26 million. It is based on the Welsh police authorities' share of Total Assumed Spending for police authorities in England and Wales.

Welsh police authorities will receive £355 million in general grant in 2003–04, an increase of 3.6 per cent. over the provision for 2002–03. In addition, they are expected to receive in specific grants sums at least equivalent to the National Assembly contribution.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many community support officers have been recruited by each police authority in England and Wales, in the last year for which figures are available. [103394]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Police forces were first invited to bid for funds for Community Support Officers (CSOs) on 31 July 2002. 27 forces made successful bids. The table sets out the numbers of CSOs recruited up to 17 March in 26 of these forces. Avon and Somerset have not, as yet, employed any CSOs although they hope to have 12 in place shortly.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will encourage rail operating companies to extend the free travel on trains available to regular police officers to members of the Special Constabulary. [99643]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The Special Constabulary has a vital role to play in reducing crime and providing reassurance to the public. We welcome any contribution that the rail operating companies, and the wider business community, can make to support the work of the Special Constabulary.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has (a) to alter and (b) to withdraw the subsistence allowance for special constables; [99648]

(2) what the rates of payments made to special constables are for (a) boot allowance and (b) subsistence allowance; when these figures were introduced; and what plans he has to increase them. [99649]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Revised allowances for special constables were set out in Home Office Circular No. 64/89, payable with effect from 11 September 1989.

The Circular set the boot allowance at an annual rate of £30, payable in arrears. A refreshment allowance for a special constable incurring expenditure to obtain a meal was set at the same rate as that approved for payment to regular constables under Regulation 58 of the Police Regulations 1987, as amended.

We are currently reviewing Home Office Circular No. 64/89.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of police resources is allocated to traffic policing (a) in the UK and (b) broken down by region; [102860]

(2) how many dedicated traffic police officers there have been in each year since 1991, broken down by region and nation; and what percentage of the total number of police officers these figures represent, broken down by region and nation; [102861]

(3) what recent discussions he has had with the Association of Chief Police Officers regarding the number of dedicated traffic police officers; and if he will make a statement. [102859]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The following tables give the readily available information in respect of England and Wales. This covers the three years since 1999, in which year the definition of 'traffic officer' used by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary changed. The definition is now

> "staff who are predominantly employed on motor-cycles or in patrol vehicles for the policing of traffic and motorway related duties".

This definition excludes those engaged in accident investigation, vehicle examination or radar duties. Policing in Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the Scottish Executive and Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

The importance given to traffic policing should not be measured solely by the number of dedicated traffic officers, and does not depend on increases or decreases in the number of such officers. The adoption of an intelligence-led approach to traffic policing, its integration with other core activities, the increased use of cameras and other technology, and the more effective use of police resources can lead to a reduction in dedicated traffic officers without a reduction in traffic-related targets or enforcement levels.

The importance of roads policing is recognised in the National Policing Plan. This sets out that forces and local authorities should include in their local policing plans targeted and intelligence-led strategies for reducing deaths and injuries on the roads and achieving a safe environment for all road users.

Officials are in regular contact with the head of the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) Road Policing Business Area and his colleagues.

RAF Fairford

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision under the Terrorism Act 2000 he is using to prevent people from protesting at RAF Fairford. [103483]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 18 March 2003]: The Terrorism Act 2000 is not being applied in the prevention of protests at RAF Fairford. Powers under this legislation are applied solely for the prevention and investigation of acts of terrorism.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special advisers in the Department (a) have left and (b) will be leaving to work in Scotland for the Labour Party in the forthcoming Scottish parliamentary elections. [103605]

Mr. Blunkett: The rules relating to Special Advisers' political activities are set out in the Model Contract for Special Advisers. Further guidance in respect of elections for the Scottish Parliament is set out at paragraph 13 of the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in United Kingdom Departments, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

The reasons for a Special Adviser's resignation are a private matter between the Department and Adviser, and are therefore exempt from disclosure under paragraph 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Information.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans Ministers in the Department have to (a) visit Scotland on official business, (b) announce public appointments and (c) make ministerial announcements in April. [103660]

Mr. Blunkett: All business undertaken by the Home Office during the campaign period preceding elections to the Scottish Parliament will be conducted in accordance with the Guidance on Conduct for Civil Servants in United Kingdom Departments in respect of elections to the Scottish Parliament and National Assembly for Wales, published by the Cabinet Office on 10 March.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Women's Portfolio Duties

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Minister for Women if she will make a statement regarding the proportion of her ministerial time she gives to her Women's Portfolio duties. [99037]

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister for Women if she will make a statement on the proportion of her ministerial time she spends on women's portfolio duties. [103779]

Ms Hewitt: With women making up about half the workforce, setting up a third of new business start-ups and making the majority of decisions as consumers, my roles as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and Minister for Women are inextricably linked. I do not therefore see the two as separate roles to which time should be specifically allocated or recorded.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) also works on women and equality issues as part of her ministerial portfolio.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Burundi

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the implications of the forthcoming change of leadership in the transitional Government of Burundi; and what plans she has to provide (a) financial and (b) political support to enable the deployment of observers and peacekeeping troops to Burundi. [103081]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

With the international community we remain committed to supporting the Arusha process and the transitional government institutions. We have given extensive support to South African Vice President Zuma and his facilitation team. We and our EU partners have committed €1.23 million to finance the African Union Observer Mission in Burundi. We now stand ready to assist financially the deployment of the African Mission, which is central to the success of the 2 December ceasefire. It is important that there is a smooth hand over of power in the Transitional National Government of Burundi. We will continue to monitor the situation closely.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the Government are doing to promote peace in Burundi. [103104]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

The UK continues to monitor the situation in Burundi closely. With the international community, we remain committed to supporting the Arusha process and the transitional government institutions. We have given extensive support to South African Vice President Zuma and his facilitation team. We and EU partners have committed €1.23 million to finance the African Union Observer Mission in Burundi. We stand ready to assist financially the deployment of the African Mission, which is central to the success of the 2 December ceasefire.

Humanitarian Assistance

Judy Mallaber: Asked the Secretary of State for International Development, what additional support is the UK Government providing to humanitarian agencies to help their preparedness and for immediate humanitarian response following conflict in Iraq. [104954]

Clare Short: I have committed £20 million to support contingency preparations by the UN humanitarian agencies, Red Cross/Red Crescent Movement and international NGOs. DFID has set aside a further £70 million for the immediate humanitarian response. The UK Government is considering further assistance in line with emerging humanitarian needs.

DFID also provides 19 per cent. of EC funding for Iraq. The EC has committed 21 million euros to the immediate response, and the UK will support the Commission's request to the budgetary authorities for additional humanitarian assistance to Iraq.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what checks he conducts against benefit fraud by members of his staff. [101554]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department for Work and Pensions adopts a robust approach to detection, prevention and deterrence of internal fraud. Local Security Specialists assess risks over a number of key areas and provide managers with assurance on the state of internal security. Management control systems are in place to deter and detect, which includes computer generated random checks on selected accesses by staff of the benefit system. In the event of internal fraud being suspected, specially trained staff are in place to investigate.

Departmental Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92475]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 27 February 2002, and the answer given to the hon. Member for North Tayside (Pete Wishart) on 17 June 2002.

The Department of Work and Pensions was formed in June 2001. This involved the amalgamation of parts of the Department for Education and Employment (including the Employment Service) with the Department of Social Security. In April 2000, the BA and CSA Press Offices merged with the DSS team, and consequently from that date all Press Releases were categorised as DSS.

It is not possible to dis-aggregate those press releases issued by DfEE relating solely to employment issues in the period requested. However, the press releases issued by the former DSS and the DWP are as follows.

Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the outcome was of the Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council held on 6 March; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [102212]

Malcolm Wicks: I represented the UK at the Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs (ESPHCA) Council in Brussels on 6 March 2003, together with my hon. Friend the Minister for Employment Relations, Industry and the Regions.

The main business of this Council was a discussion on the proposed Directive on working conditions for temporary workers and the preparation of the Spring European Council, to take place on 21 March.

On the former, following lunchtime discussion, the Presidency concluded that the dossier was not ready for agreement at this point. The UK declared its readiness to reach agreement on a directive, but one with considerably more flexibility than the current draft, and joined the consensus for aiming for political agreement in June.

On the latter, the Council adopted without amendment the Joint Employment Report 2002 and its contribution to the Spring Council, "Key messages on the future of the Employment Strategy". In a public debate, member states were in broad agreement on the priorities for the revised Employment Guidelines outlined in the paper: the Guidelines should be fewer in number, focused on outputs rather than inputs, and linked closely to the Lisbon employment rate targets.

The debate also revealed broad support for the idea of an Employment Task Force, as proposed by the UK, France and Germany. The Council agreed that the Task Force should be a one-off, independent analysis of the measures required to improve Europe's employment performance in the short term. The Task Force should complement the revised Employment Strategy, without creating any new processes.

Council approved Joint Reports from the Commission and the Council on adequate and sustainable pensions, and on the future of health care and care for the elderly. It noted the opinion of the Social Protection Committee on the Commission's Synthesis Report and agreed a key issues paper on social protection to be sent to the Spring Council.

The Commission reassured the Council that its forthcoming Communication on streamlining of social protection would acknowledge that different methods and time scales were appropriate for different areas of work. It would also respect subsidiarity.

The Council noted the work programmes for 2003 of the Employment Committee and the Social Protection Committee.

The Council adopted a decision establishing a Tripartite Social Summit for Growth and Employment, noting the declaration from Denmark and the UK that the agreement was on the understanding that it did not set a precedent for the use of Article 202 as a Treaty base for such decisions.

The Council heard without comment presentations by the Commission on initiatives following the Commission action plan for skills and mobility: European health insurance card, legal basis of the European Employment Services (EURES), and free movement of workers.

Following an orientation debate, the Council agreed on a joint Presidency and Commission proposal for the Council to send an annual report on Gender Mainstreaming to the Spring Council. The Commission agreed with the UK that this would not involve the establishment of a new process.

The Commission reported on progress under the European Year of People with Disabilities and outlined its forthcoming report on the social situation in Europe focusing on health.

No Consumer Affairs items were on the agenda.

No votes were taken at this Council.

Medical Retirement

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in Wales under the age of 60 retired early due to ill health in each of the last five years, broken down by county. [102755]

Maria Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested.

Online Sales/Purchases

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what (a) products, (b) goods and (c) services were (i) bought and (ii) sold online by his Department in each of the last five years. [97439]

Mr. McCartney: The Department introduced electronic procurement in April 1997 for forms and leaflets direct from contract suppliers. Stationery and computer consumables, paper and general office products were added in April 2001.

Jobcentre Plus has used online processes for travel services and hotel and conference facilities from April 1998. It is intended to pilot these commodities to the rest of DWP beginning June 2003.

The Department also has a number publications, for example research reports, that can be viewed online. Hard copies of these reports have been available for purchase by members of the public and organisations through the Department's web site since July 2001.

Pensions

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the replacement ratio is by (a) state pension only, (b) state pension and SERPS and (c) state pension, SERPS and private pension provision. [99980]

Mr. McCartney: An individual's replacement rate depends upon a number of factors, including past saving behaviour, employment history, earnings profile, private pension provision, investment returns and date of retirement. Depending on earnings, income-related benefits are also available such as MIG and Pension Credit. Figure 2.7 in the recent Green Paper (Cm 5677) shows replacement rates from the state in 2050 as a percentage of weekly average earnings. The Government's strategy is to focus resources on those pensioners who need them the most. As a result, those with low lifetime incomes will have higher replacement rates provided by the state.

The Government have no specific objective on earnings replacement. It is the responsibility of individuals, where possible supported by their employers, to determine the level of income in retirement they want over and above that provided by the state system. Given their state income, figure 2.8 in the Green Paper (cm 5677) estimates the weekly contributions an individual and their employers would need to make to a private pension for the individual to retire on either half or two-thirds of their final salary in 2050.

The assumptions underlying figures 2.7 and 2.8 are detailed in Annex 5 of the Green Paper (Cm 5677) and in the figures' accompanying footnotes.

Return to Work (Benefits)

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to ensure that those who enter work (a) do not experience delays in obtaining the benefits to which they are entitled and (b) are not financially penalised in the time before they receive their first full wage payments. [89290]

Malcolm Wicks: Making the move from benefit into employment can be worrying. In recognition of this we have developed a package of financial help designed to provide real support for people making this transition and give them confidence that they can take up work.

To bridge the gap between leaving benefit and receiving a salary we introduced the Job Grant in April 2001. The Job Grant can provide a one-off tax-free payment of £100 for people aged 25 and over moving into full-time work. We have recently announced our intention to extend and improve the Job Grant to include lone parents and people claiming incapacity benefits. For Lone Parents, this will replace the Lone Parent Run-On that currently provides continued benefit payments for lone parents for the first two weeks after moving from benefits into work.

To assist people with their housing costs we have Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit Extended Payments which can provide Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit at their pre-work rate for the first four weeks after moving from Income Support/Jobseekers Allowance into work. We have recently announced plans to extend this scheme to include people claiming Incapacity Benefit. People may also be able to continue getting help with mortgage interest payments in the first four weeks of employment through Mortgage Interest Run-On.

The Adviser Discretion Fund, which was introduced in July 2001, gives New Deal personal advisers direct access to funds to remove immediate barriers to employment and help people move quickly into work. Advisers can award up to £300 per eligible client for purchase of anything that will help them obtain a job or, if already offered a job, to accept that offer. The Adviser Discretion Fund is currently only available to New Deal participants though we have recently announced plans to extend its availability to everyone who has been claiming a benefit for six months or more.

Our New Tax credits provide a secure stream of income for families with children, which will be of particular importance during the transition from benefits to work.

This package of measures and the improvements announced in the pre-Budget Report, reduces the risk of people having to return to benefits due to financial difficulties when starting work.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Correspondence

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 26 February 2003, Official Report, column 593W, on correspondence, when he will provide a substantive reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 16 December, ref. GV100/79888/NS (98396). [104351]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My noble Friend Baroness Amos, Minister responsible for nationality and passport matters arising overseas, sent a substantive reply to my hon. Friend on 19 March.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what his latest estimate is of the (a) market value and (b) same use cost of FCO buildings in (i) Riyadh, Saudia Arabia, (ii) Singapore, (iii) Bratislava, Slovakia, (iv) Ankara, Turkey, (v) Atlanta, USA, (vi) Boston, USA, (vii) Houston, USA, (viii) Seattle, USA, (ix) Los Angeles, USA and (x) Bangkok, Thailand; and if he will make a statement; [98379]

(2) what his latest estimate is of the (a) market value and (b) same use value of the FCO properties at (i) Berlin, Germany, (ii) Munich, Germany, (iii) Accra, Ghana, (iv) Guatemala City, Guatemala, (v) Hong Kong.(vi) Bombay, India, (vii) Calcutta, India, (viii) Madras, India, (ix) New Delhi, India, (x) Naples, Italy, (xi) Rome, Italy, (xii) Kingston, Jamaica, (xiii) Tokyo, Japan, (xiv) Abuja, Nigeria, (xv) Kaduna, Nigeria, (xvi) Lagos, Nigeria and (xvii) Muscat, Oman; and what plans he has to sell these buildings. [98380]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 25 February 2003, Official Report, column 430W.

Iraq

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of the costs associated with the military support being provided to enable the return of the UN arms inspectors to Iraq to the UN; and what arrangements are being made to pay the military costs falling to UN member states that enabled the return of the inspectors. [103808]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under UNSCR 1284 UNMOVIC operations are funded by a diversion of funds from the Oil-For-Food programme. Their operations are, therefore, effectively self-financing. Since the return of the UNMOVIC inspectors to Iraq, a number of countries have provided support to their activities. We do not know the costs associated which this assistance. There has been no UK military support for UNMOVIC at the moment.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK nationals are imprisoned in Saudi Arabia; and what discussions he has had with the Saudi government on their behalf. [101708]

Mr. Rammell: There are currently 12 British nationals detained in Saudi Arabia. Consular staff are in regular contact with the Saudi authorities and we raise issues relating to individual detainees on a case-by-case basis. Consular staff continue to provide all consular assistance they properly can to the detainees.

Scotland

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times he has visited Scotland on official duties each year since 2000; and what meetings were held on each occasion. [103608]

Mr. Straw: In respect of the period from 8 June 2001 when I became Foreign Secretary, I visited Scotland on official duties on Tuesday 27 August 2002. I had meetings with the Edinburgh Chamber of Commerce and with First Minister Jack McConnell MSP, and visited Trinity Academy, Edinburgh.

Sudan

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 11 February 2003, Official Report, column 728W, on Sudan, if he will place in the Library an account of the discussions his Department has had with aid agencies regarding the Sudanese air traffic control system; and if he will make a statement. [102995]

Mr. Rammell: We have no formal record of discussions aid agencies about the Sudanese air traffic control system. FCO officials expressed the view that Sudan has a need for a modern air traffic control system. A large number of commercial flights fly over and within Sudan. A modern air traffic control system is crucial for the safety of United Nations and Non-Governmental Organisations' staff involved in the delivery of vital humanitarian aid in Sudan.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many defendants have appeared before a Court in England in each of the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement. [99829]

Notes:

1. Crown and magistrates court figures—there will be an element of double-counting where some defendants have appeared before the courts on separate charges/trials.

2. County court and High Court figures—these are the numbers of trials and small claims hearings that were heard. An assumption has been made that each hearing involved the defendant's attendance.

House of Lords Reform Unit

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much was spent on the House of Lords Reform Unit in each year from 2000–01 to 2003–04 (planned); and if she will make a statement. [99830]

Yvette Cooper: Until October 2001, officials dealing with House of Lords reform were an integral part of the Constitution Secretariat at the Cabinet Office and were also engaged in other duties within the Secretariat. On transfer of the functions to the Lord Chancellor's Department, provision of £361,000 was also transferred. This included provision for the purchase of legal advice to the Unit. The lawyers' part of the transferred resources has now been allocated to that part of the Department along with the posts in question. The estimated outturn for the House of Lords Reform unit for 2002–3 is £181,000. However, both the officials in the Unit and the legal advisers have been principally engaged on other duties within the Lord Chancellor's Department. The spending on the House of Lords Reform Unit in 2003–04 will depend on the work needed in response to the decisions made by the Committee on House of Lords Reform. Provision has been made for a budget of up to £273,000.

Immigration Adjudicators

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many immigration adjudicators are (a) part-time and (b) full-time; and how many vacancies there are. [103219]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There are 146 salaried and 454 fee-paid immigration adjudicators. There are no vacancies, but 30 salaried appointments are pending.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will make a statement on the recent report of the Bar Council that recommended that the Lord Chancellor should lose the power to appoint judges and QCs. [103259]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Sir Iain Glidewell's report has been issued for consultation until the end of April. His final report will be considered by the Bar Council in June. It would be inappropriate for the Lord Chancellor to make a statement on the document at this stage.

Legal Practitioners

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment she has made of the adequacy of measures taken to ensure that there are sufficient numbers of legal practitioners undertaking publicly funded legal work. [102854]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I am satisfied that adequate measures have been taken to ensure that there are sufficient numbers of legal practitioners undertaking publicly funded legal work. My Department and the Legal Services Commission (LSC) monitor monthly the coverage of publicly funded civil and criminal legal service suppliers. For civil legal services, this is done through analysis of the numbers of contracted firms on a regional basis by the Regional Legal Services Committees. The adequacy of criminal legal services is monitored by the LSC's Criminal Defence Service executive, which has information about the extent of provision through contracts with criminal legal aid suppliers, and which monitors duty solicitor availability through management of duty solicitor rotas.

Lord Chancellor's Apartments

Norman Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much public money has been spent each year since 1 May 1997 on (a) maintaining and (b) improving apartments occupied by the Lord Chancellor. [96416]

Ms Rosie Winterton: As part of a rolling programme of refurbishment throughout the Parliamentary Estate, the Lord Chancellor's State Rooms in the Palace of Westminster were refurbished in 1997–78 at a cost of £580,000. The scheme included the installation of automatic fire detection, fire compartmentation, electrical rewiring, asbestos removal and essential maintenance. The refurbishment was authorised by the House of Lords Administration and Works Sub-committee on 8 July 1997 and by its Finance and Staff Sub-committee on 16 July 1997. The House of Lords Offices Committee submitted a report to the full House which was agreed on 30 July 1997.

Since 1998, only minor routine maintenance has been carried out. The Palace of Westminster does not keep records in such a way that allows such minor expenditure to be quantified in relation to a particular area of the Palace.

At the conclusion of the refurbishment, the Lord Chancellor, for the first time, opened the residence to members of the public for tours and for charitable functions to be held. Tours of the residence and access for charitable functions are provided free of charge. To date, over £5.3 million has been raised for charitable causes.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will list internal flights made by Ministers in the Lord Chancellor's Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (iii) economy class. [103582]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Secret Societies

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to require new applicants for the magistrates and the judiciary to disclose membership of secret societies; and if he will make a statement. [102804]

Ms Rosie Winterton: All applicants for the lay magistracy and all those being offered an appointment for the first time to part-time or full-time judicial office are required to declare whether or not they are freemasons.

Works of Art

Norman Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what works of art are on loan to the Lord Chancellor's Department and are located in (a) his apartments and (b) his own offices; and from where they have been borrowed. [96420]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Forty-one works of art on loan to the Palace of Westminster are located within the Lord Chancellor's residence and office. In the residence there are two paintings on loan from the National Maritime Museum, six paintings and three sculptures on loan from the Royal Academy, 10 paintings on loan from the Imperial War Museum, six paintings on loan from the Fitzwilliam Museum, four paintings and three sets of prints on loan from the National Galleries of Scotland, and four sets of engravings and one set of plaster casts are on loan from the National Galleries of Scotland.

In the Lord Chancellor's office, there are two paintings on loan from the National Galleries of Scotland and two paintings on loan from the National Maritime Museum.

All works of art are from the reserve collections of these museums. As with all works of art on loan to the Palace of Westminster, these are subject to recall at any time by the lending institutions should they be required for an exhibition.

The Lord Chancellor's residence and offices are used for official purposes in connection with the Lord Chancellor's roles as Speaker of the House of Lords and Cabinet Minister. In addition, the Lord Chancellor's residence has been open to visitors since 1998. About 10,400 people have taken part in guided tours and a further 12,300 people have attended charity functions in the residence. So far, over £5.3 million has been raised for charitable causes from receptions in the residence.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

External Finance

Mr. Maude: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what was (a) the total amount and (b) the proportion of aggregate external finance that central Government provided to local government for which local authorities were required to bid in each year since 1997. [103729]

Mr. Raynsford: Tabled as follows are all special grants inside Aggregate External Finance (AEF) that were listed at the time of the Local Government Finance Settlement and the amount for which local authorities were required to bid in each Financial Year. The total amount and proportion of AEF that this represents is at the foot of the table.

Mass Decontamination

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many protective suits for use in mass decontamination have been provided for the Tyne and Wear Fire Brigade; and what proportion of the Brigade can be supplied with such suits. [103836]

Mr. Raynsford: The extra 4,000 gas tight suits being purchased under the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister 's £56 million New Dimension programme will be deployed flexibly, on the basis of a comprehensive analysis of risk, to meet the needs of all fire authorities including those of Tyne and Wear. This represents a doubling of existing capacity.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what finance has been set aside for the funding of new special purpose vehicles for use in mass decontamination; and how many such vehicles, and at what cost (a) have been ordered and (b) are in the hands of fire authorities. [103838]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has made available, from its own and Treasury funds, £56 million under the New Dimension programme to finance the purchase of 80 new vehicles and 190 purpose built decontamination units. They will be deployed flexibly, on the basis of a comprehensive analysis of risk, to meet the needs of all fire authorities. Delivery of the equipment for training purposes will take place in the next few weeks.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many new special purpose vehicles for mass decontamination are (a) planned for and (b) in the hands of Tyne and Wear Fire Brigade. [103837]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's New Dimension programme will provide 80 special purpose vehicles for carrying mass decontamination equipment. They will be deployed flexibly, on the basis of a comprehensive analysis of risk, to meet the needs of all fire authorities including those of Tyne and Wear. Delivery of equipment for training purposes will take place in the next few weeks.

New Deal for Communities

Matthew Green: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 4 March 2003, Official Report, column 932W, on the New Deal for Communities, in which year the 17 employees had their contracts terminated; in which year the two employees were made redundant; what the total pay-out in financial settlement for each employee was; and how much of each financial settlement came from central government funding, including grants. [102657]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested is not held centrally. It is currently being collected from Government Offices and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is collated.

Matthew Green: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 24 February 2003, Official Report, column 263W, on the New Deal for Communities, what the administrative budget was for each financial year. [102680]

Mrs. Roche: There is no annual New Deal for Communities (NDC) administrative budget. However over the 10 year programme each NDC must not spend more than 10 per cent. of its allocation on management and administration. In the early years NDC's admin expenditure will be a higher percentage of its total spend than in later years. This is because early on each NDC has to set itself and its systems up before it can start getting projects under way.

Objective One

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the amount of Objective One monies spent in Wirral, South in the last 12 months. [103176]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not hold information on levels of European funding at constituency level. However the Wirral, South constituency will benefit from £13.5 million European funding to the Wirral local authority area since 1 March 2002. The individual projects are listed in the following tables. As the Objective One programme is Merseyside-wide in scope, a further substantial amount of programme-funded activity will be delivered by organisations that have a pan-Merseyside remit.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the amount of Objective One money spent in each Merseyside constituency; [103927]

(2) of (a) first and (b) second tranche Objective One moneys spent in Wirral, South as a percentage of the whole. [103794]

Mr. Raynsford: Because the Programme is Regional in scope, a substantial amount of Programme-funded activity will be delivered by organisations that have a pan-Merseyside remit. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister cannot therefore calculate spending in constituencies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 2002-03

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 401 Index pp1-60 (A-ZOO) 10 - 21 March 2003

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES SESSION 2002–2003 VOLUME 401

10th March—21st March 2003

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'ws' indicate written statements.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting, is a written statement or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Chamber Debates (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Debates Westminster Hall Debates (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Written Statements (consisting of ministerial statements issued in writing); and
  - Questions (which includes all written, oral and private notice questions).
